WAR CRISIS IN CHINA

Making Battles With Rebels

War Involving 300,000 Men in Honan Province; Reserves Hurled In

Nationalists and Northern Forces Both Claim Victory; Decision Must Come

PEIPING, June 28. (AP)—Striking at the heart of China's Central Plain, rebel forces tonight are engaged with the Nationalist armies in Honan Province in an engagement that may prove the decisive battle of the rebellion.

A battle of 300,000 men raged tonight, becoming more intense at dawn as each side rushed reinforcements to the front lines.

Thousand soldiers were thrown into the battle by each commander without marked advantage to either in the central struggle of the series of battles which began May 8 in the Nationalist effort to break through to Peiping and overthrow the government of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

VICTORY IN DOUBT

Fighting is so fierce, said independent dispatches, either rebels or Nationalists must give way, but victory cannot be predicted.

Despite Nationalist claims to victory, rebel dispatches asserted that columns of Gens. Feng Yu-hsiang and Yen Hsi-shan are threatening the government lines so that the fall of Lanfeng and Kaifeng to the rebels is imminent and victory is assured.

Although predicting the Nationalists will triumph, Foreign Minister Wang admitted the government considers the crisis is the most critical it has experienced.

REBELS STRONGER

It said, however, the government is using all resources of men, money and munitions and Chiang Kai-shek, himself, will break the back of the rebellion. This will be done, he said, when the Nationalist capture Kaifeng and capture Honan.

Foreign Province dispatches said the Nationalists are continuing their drive northward before slowly advancing northern forces, but are still fighting south of the Klangsu border.

Despite the civil war conditions south of the Yangtze River are reported normal.

The government asserted that rebels are scattering the Kwangsi rebels, driving them into Hunan and Kiangsi and Kwangsi into Kwangsi and Kwangtung further south.

LIGHTNING BOLT STRIPS MAN

Victim Embarrassed, Slight Burns His Only Injury

TROUPSBURG (N. Y.) June 28. (AP)—A bolt of lightning stripped Bert Schoonover of his clothing, burning him slightly, as he perched on the cast iron sink in his home telling his wife of his unsuccessful attempt to beat the storm.

FREIGHTER OFF COAST SENDS SOS

Onondaga, Ford Vessel, Disabled Near Rock-Lined Mendocino County Shore

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28. (Exclusive)—Disabled by a broken propeller, the steel freighter, Onondaga, owned by the Ford Motor Company, carrying a crew of 250 officers and men and laden with automobiles, sent out an S.O.S. late today from a point off the rocky Mendocino county coast, twenty-three miles north of Point Arena, and about 100 miles north of the Golden Gate.

The S.O.S. was picked up by the Coast Guard here and five vessels in the vicinity, all of whom reported they were going to the Onondaga's assistance. Fear was felt because of the dangerous nature of the shoreline and the stricken vessel's lack of headway.

The steamer Morris, the oil tanker Charley Watson, the Coast Guard cutters Tahoe and Shawnee, and the tug Seascout headed for the scene.

The Onondaga is of 1448 tons and is commanded by Capt. K. E. Prins.

In a later message the Onondaga radioed she is proceeding to Seattle under her own power.

VETERAN AID REPORTED

New Legislation Before Senate

Committee Vote Unanimous; Minor Amendments Added to Bill

Disability Pension Increase Move by Democrats Meets Defeat

WASHINGTON, June 28. (AP)—The new House veterans' relief measure was reported unanimously to the Senate today with minor amendments by the Senate Finance Committee.

An attempt by Democrats to increase the rates for disability pensions was voted down, 11 to 8.

Republicans on the committee, with the exception of Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, voted against the increase in these rates which would have allowed a $80 maximum instead of $40.

The committee then voted unanimously to report the measure.

Senator Watson, acting chairman of the committee, announced he will report the bill to the Senate at once and will call it Monday.

The request of the American Legion for a provision allowing an extension of one year in which to file suit for claims on war risk insurance was accepted by the committee without contest.

Senators Walsh, Democrat, Massachusetts, and Connally, Democrat, Texas, sponsored an amendment to increase the disability pensions. They intend to carry their fight to the floor.

Walsh and Connally also fought to amend the bill to extend the benefits to those veterans who contracted social disease during their service and who now are suffering disability as a result. This motion lost on a tie vote.

The Democrats were successful in an amendment striking from the House bill the stipulation that the benefits of the legislation would not extend to veterans who pay income tax.

The committee unanimously agreed to an amendment providing for the consolidation of all veterans' agencies and activities. The new agency is to be known as the veterans' administration and it will include the Pension Bureau, now a separate government agency.

The request of the American Legion for abolishment of the office of Comptroller of the Veterans' Bureau was defeated.

The committee also eliminated the House provision that World War veterans who enlisted after signing of the armistice November 11, 1918, would not be subject to benefits. About 5000 veterans in this class who are receiving government aid would have been eliminated.

INDUSTRIAL AGE LIMIT HIT

Physician Backs Ford's Contention That Men Past 50 Remain in Peak of Efficiency

DETROIT, June 28. (AP)—Cheering news—first, from the industrial world, and now from the medical profession—has come to the man of 50 years of age who feels his age a bar to efficiency and a handicap to his position.

Not long ago Henry Ford was quoted as saying "if all the men of 55 years of age or over were removed from industry, there would not be brains enough to carry on." The older men, Mr. Ford pointed out, are an indispensable balance to the younger and more vigorous workers.

And now Dr. J. A. Britton, Chicago physician, who appeared before the convention of the American Medical Association here, says he believes American industry "makes a serious mistake in discarding a man when he reaches the age of 45."

"When this is done," Dr. Britton says, "the ten years of a man's life in which he attains his maximum efficiency are being thrown away. The age of maximum efficiency is attained in the last ten years.

"From the ages of 45 to 55 a man delivers more in judgment, stability and loyalty, and in every virtue except muscular agility and sheer muscular power. In professional baseball, for instance, a man may not be worth much at 45, but even in baseball I have noticed it takes the old heads to win the pennants."

Dr. Britton urged the application of preventive medicine in order that workers may not become prematurely incapacitated, and forced to give up their occupation in the years when they will be of most value to their employers and families.

TAX TO HIT BACHELORS IN GERMANY

Fourth of Sum Needed to Wipe Out Deficit Will be Taken from Single Folk

BERLIN, June 28. (AP)—Roughly one-fourth of all the millions the German government needs to wipe out its vexing deficit is expected to be raised from the pockets of bachelors and bachelor maids.

A revised financial program presented to the Reichsrat today by Chancellor Bruening and Finance Minister Dietrich, which the Cabinet is determined to rush through both the Reichsrat and Reichstag, makes it clear that Germans of both sexes who shy at the altar of matrimony will have to contribute to the national necessity at least 110,000,000 marks (about $25,000,000) of the 480,000,000 marks Dr. Dietrich plans to raise for balancing the budget.

The Chancellor estimates that amount will be forthcoming from the bachelor tax with another 58,000,000 marks, from a 5 per cent surtax on incomes more than 6000 marks; 135,000,000 marks from a nonrecurring emergency tax on the salaries of government employees; with 100,000,000 slashed from the budgets of the various ministries.

Chancellor Bruening explained new taxation was made necessary by the unemployment situation.

Birthplace of Eagle for Sale

DETROIT, June 28. (AP)—The birthplace of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh once more is for sale.

A real estate company has placed the "For Sale" sign in front of the home at 1120 Forest avenue, on which is a bronze tablet commemorating the birthplace of the famous flyer.

The house was bought in April, 1929, by the Swedish Engineering Society as a clubhouse and a Lindbergh museum, but the society notified the real estate company they were forced to return the property at a $6000 loss because it "proved to be unfitted for club purposes."

Two Angelenos Feared Drowned

SACRAMENTO, June 28. (AP)—Two persons, tentatively identified as Virgie Theodore Olsen and Helen G. Olsen, of 1240 Muirfield Road, Los Angeles, are believed to have drowned in Lake Tahoe some time Friday night, according to word received here late today from the Placerville Sheriff's office.

A small rowboat in which the couple had left camp early Friday morning was found three miles off shore in the vicinity of Emerald Bay. An opened pocketbook was found clinging to the boat, but no sign of the missing occupants was seen.

RANGE AND GRAIN FIRES ON RAMPAGE

Four Hundred Men Fight Flames Destroying Crops and Grass Near Colusa

COLUSA, June 28. (Exclusive)—Four hundred men are battling two grain and range fires, which have burned 10,000 acres in the Antelope Valley foothills and still are burning on wide fronts. Both fires are said to have been started by sparks from harvesting machines.

The first, sweeping down the valley on a two-mile front at its narrowest point, burned to death 100 sheep owned by D. C. Dunlap and more than 3000 acres of grazing land owned by J. W. Browning, millionaire stockman. Fences were destroyed around the Mills Orchard Company's property.

The second fire broke out eight miles north of Mills Orchard, starting on the Peterson ranch, which necessitated splitting up the fire crew.

A smaller blaze, two miles north of Willows, destroyed 100 acres of barley on the Frank Enos ranch, 250 acres of barley on the George Michael ranch, and seven acres on land owned by Pat Feeney. Leonard Boyer of Pruto was overcome by heat and smoke while fighting flames on the Enos property.

Nearly 5000 acres of range land of Garnett & Larrabee near Pruto was burned over in a three days' fire, but was brought under control today.

CRIME FUND PLAN LAID

House May Move for $250,000

President's Followers Will Attempt Restoration of Commission's Cash

Then Senators Will Have to Act Again on Continuing Investigation Work

WASHINGTON, June 28. (AP)—Administration followers in the House laid plans today for an effort to restore in the second deficiency bill the original $250,000 for the study of all law-enforcement problems.

Representative Tilson of Connecticut, the Republican leader, said although the conferees cannot "increase the $50,000 authorized in a Senate amendment for the study of prohibition, it can be resubmitted to the House for action when the conference report is brought up next week. The House, he said, can increase the amount and then it will be up to the Senate to act.

ANOTHER MOVE

At the same time a move is to be made to permit the commission to carry on its broad investigation instead of restricting it to prohibition.

The contention President Hoover could not lawfully carry on the work of the commission by private funds was made in the House by Representative La Guardia, New York Republican.

La Guardia said the activities of a public commission cannot be carried on save by Congressional appropriation. The Senate voted $50,000 for the law-enforcement commission, but limited the funds to an investigation of prohibition enforcement. President Hoover then announced other work of the commission will be carried on by private funds.

Almost at the same time, Representative Mead, Democrat, New York, introduced a resolution to require the President or Chairman George W. Wickersham of the commission to report to the clerk of the House the amount of contributions and their contributors.

ACTION DEFERRED

In the meantime, the House and Senate conferees, considering the second deficiency bill, calling for an outlay of $80,000,000 to cover contingencies in government departments, including $10,680,000 to begin work at Boulder Dam, deferred action until Monday.

Representative Ramseyer of Iowa took issue with Representative La Guardia's contention that a law enforcement investigation financed by private funds would be unlawful. He pointed out that members of the commission are not officers of the government, and can continue their investigations of general crime problems as individuals.

Antipadlock Bill Pressed

WASHINGTON, June 28. (AP)—Immediate consideration of his bill to prevent padlocking under the Volstead Act was requested of the House Judiciary Committee today by Representative McLeod, Republican, Michigan.

McLeod urged that his bill be enacted "to restore the confidence of property owners in order to prevent further business depression and stagnation of the real-estate business throughout the country."

SKY CROWN WOBBLING

City of Chicago Ties Record

Hunter Brothers Reach Mark Set by St. Louis Pair Last Year

Kenneth Sent Drops for His Aching Tooth as Pilots Fly in Underwear

CHICAGO, June 28. (Sunday) (Exclusive)—John and Kenneth Hunter, in their City of Chicago reached for the air endurance crown when, at 5:01 a.m. (CDT) 2:01 a.m. (Pacific Time) they equaled the 420 hours, 21 minutes and 30 second mark set last year by Dale Jackson and Forest O'Brien. In just one more hour, or at 6:01 a.m. (CDT) a new mark will have been established.

In an earlier message dropped by the brothers said they intend to remain aloft until July 4.

CHICAGO, June 28. (Exclusive) The orange and black City of Chicago, with John and Kenneth Hunter dozing at the controls, continued to wing idle circles over the Sky Harbor Airport today bent for a place in aviation's hall of fame. At 9:40 central daylight-saving time tonight the Stinson-Detroiter cabin monoplane had been aloft 413 hours. As the dawn clears tomorrow at 5:01 Central daylight-saving time the brothers will have passed the record of 420 hours, 21 minutes and 30 seconds set last year by Dale Jackson and Forest O'Brein in the St. Louis Robin. When the plane took off seventeen days ago the brothers promised to better that record by 100 hours, which would keep them in the air twenty-two days.

The craft wavered on its course because of the leak in the left-wing tank, which has necessitated shutting off the tank, and has thrown the full burden to the right wing. To vary the monotony of the circling flight the brothers occasionally wing toward the lake and back to the airport over Lake Forest and Highland Park. Another attempt to repair the leak will be made.

KENNETH'S TOOTH ACHES

Another difficulty beset Brother Kenneth early in the morning. Mechanical difficulties and overpowering weariness were forgotten in a toothache. A note scrawled on oil paper informed Brothers Albert and Walter, who are handling the refueling plane, of trouble, with the comment: "It hurts like hell." The refueling plane took off with a packet of toothache drops. The pilots were also given a bottle of water with which they plan to bathe. A razor, the third the pilots have used in the air, and two clean shirts completed the load of the rescue plane.

The motor is still holding up without mishap. A leak in the oil line brought worry but the pilots repaired it none the worse for the experience save for an oil shower. The brothers are flying in their underwear, finding it more comfortable despite the chill.

BOTH PILOTS TIRED

Kenneth and John have abandoned regular hours at the controls. In missives to their brothers on the ground they have said that each holds the stick as long as he can and then arouses the other. Shifts are becoming shorter as they reach the zero hour, but both have hope that breaking of the record will bring renewed vitality.

Late in the afternoon home town folks from Sparta, Ill., arrived to tell the flyers that the town is proud of them. The delegation included Rush Carley, president, and William Keigley, secretary of the Sparta Chamber of Commerce, and Robert Moffett and Tommy Fair, who once worked in the coal mines with the brothers.

STRAYING SONS SINK IOWA

Neglect to Count in Long Beach on Census Puts Tall Corn State Below Minnesota's Rank

WASHINGTON, June 28. (AP)—If a Governor's salary were gauged by the number he governs, Gov. Christianson of Minnesota, now could ask for a rise. For Minnesota, with seventeen years' handicap in settlement and twelve years' handicap in Statehood, now outnumbers Iowa for the first time in census history.

There now are 2,558,265 Minnesotans. There are 2,468,748 Iowans. Gov. Christianson of Minnesota gets a $7000 salary. Gov. Hammill of Iowa gets $7500.

For many years after Iowa became a State in 1846 her stock in the census went up like the hand of a native singing, "That's Where the Tall Corn Grows." She leaped from twenty-ninth State in 1840 to a proud tenth place in 1890, a position which she held for twenty years. Then Iowa had a population slump and between 1900 and 1910 showed an 0.3 per cent decrease.

Whereupon Minnesota, the wheat State, settled in 1905, admitted in 1858, put out a few beards indicating increasing age and fell to flourishing with a right good will. She jumped from twenty-sixth spot in 1880 to seventeenth in 1920, just behind Iowa, which had been jogged down to sixteenth by then.

During the next ten years Minnesota was forging to the front. Her biggest city, Minneapolis, 1930 population 464,674, a 22 per cent increase, passed up her closest rival, New Orleans, population 451,624, increase 18.5 per cent.

Iowa's 1930 population fell 89,518 short of the Minnesota mark.

BOLIVIA RULED BY REVOLTERS

Ex-President Siles Flees to Brazil Legation

Military Board Takes Over Administration

Executive Mansion Labeled "Tomb of Tyrants"

LA PAZ, June 28. (AP)—Former President Siles of Bolivia and his family were refugees tonight in the Brazilian legation.

The government of the country now is in the hands of a military board over which presides Gen. Carlos Blanco Galindo. Three colonels and two lieutenant-colonels are the other members.

Except for the tenseness caused by the recent political upheaval and the entrance of revolutionary forces into the city, La Paz was leading its normal life tonight.

POLITICIANS FLEE

Several prominent politicians allied with Siles have fled or sought protection in other legations. Soldiers have been sent to the provinces to capture some of the leaders of the old Ministry.

The Siles family has been treated with every consideration by the insurgents.

A sign painted by an unknown hand on the executive mansion today said, "La Paz is the tomb of tyrants."

Several civilians were killed as the revolutionary army captured the capital but the exact number of casualties is not known. There was much shooting.

CADETS ARRESTED

The revolutionists promptly surrounded the homes of President Siles and his ministers, but the chief executive and most of his cabinet advisers had already fled to safety.

Some cadets of the national military academy defended the presidential mansion for a while, and were joined by many civilians. In this skirmish a large part of the casualties among civilians occurred. The revolutionists captured thirty-one cadets and put them into prison.

Communication with the outside world was cut off. The insurgents cut some telegraph wires and established a strict censorship. No new despatches were sent from La Paz until tonight.

Must Men Fear 40?

Medical authorities agree that 55 per cent of all men past middle age (many much younger) are afflicted with a disorder of the prostate gland. Aches in feet, legs and back, frequent nightly risings, sciatic pains, are some of the signs—and now a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science has written a remarkably interesting Free Book that tells of other symptoms and just what they mean. No longer should a man approaching or past the prime of life be content to regard these pains and conditions as inevitable signs of approaching age. Already more than 50,000 men have used the amazing method described in this book to restore their health and vigor—and to restore the prostate gland to its proper functioning. Arrange immediately for this book. Call in person if possible, otherwise mail your request to The Electro Thermal Company, Dept. B-179, 302 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles—the concern that is distributing this book for the author—it will be sent to you absolutely free, without obligation. Simply send name and address. But don't delay, for the edition of this book is limited.—[Advertisement.

CITY OF CHICAGO NEAR AIR MARK

This announcement was made by Joseph R. Heckel, former City Alderman, who has been appointed by Jackson and O'Brine to raise $35,000 to finance such a flight.

Jackson and O'Brine plan to take off at 7 a.m. July 13, exactly one year after the start of their record-setting flight above Lambert-St. Louis Field.

This time, they said, they will "stay up until the plane shakes to pieces." They will use sister ships to the St. Louis Robin, in which they made the present record, naming the endurance plane the Greater St. Louis.

MOB IN TEXAS SHOOTS NEGRO

Killing Follows His Attack on White Couple

Man and Wife Wounded in Their Own Home

Suspect Riddled When He Fires on Pursuers

AUSTIN (Tex.) June 28. (AP)—Less than an hour after he had shot and seriously wounded Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Eggar of Round Rock, near here, Jack Robertson, a Negro, was shot and killed by a posse today.

Mr. and Mrs. Eggar are in a hospital at Georgetown in a serious condition, but their wounds are not expected to prove fatal.

The shooting is said to have followed an argument over payment of wages to Robertson by Eggar.

The Negro was shot by two members of a posse estimated at 150 who took up the search immediately after the Eggars were wounded. He had attempted to flee from Round Rock but was intercepted along the road to Austin and killed instantly.

Eggar and his wife were shot shortly before noon in their residence in the presence of their 14-year-old daughter, Willie Mae, immediately following the shooting the girl ran to a neighbor's residence and spread the alarm.

Eggar was shot in the head and breast with bird shot from a shotgun. Attending physicians stated he probably will lose the sight of his right eye. Mrs. Eggar was shot in the right breast and side.

The Negro fled in an automobile, but was intercepted about five miles from Round Rock. According to officers, the Negro opened fire on the posse first and was killed after a woman companion had been ordered from the automobile.

CLOSE GUARD KEPT ON NEGRO AT BEAUMONT

BEAUMONT (Tex.) June 28. (AP) Extraordinary precautions to repulse any attempt to take from the County Jail here Rainey Williams, Negro, indicted today for his asserted part in a series of attacks on white women in the vicinity of Port Arthur, were taken tonight by county authorities.

One of six indictments charges a capital offense against a Negress. One indictment is for attempted criminal assault, three for assault with intent to murder and one for robbery with firearms.

It is asserted Williams accosted couples parked along the highways.

Sheriff Covington placed a heavy guard around the jail after reports reached him that last night's effort to release the prisoner and deal summarily with him would be renewed tonight. Advices from Port Arthur, however, said the situation was quiet there and doubt was expressed if mob violence again will be attempted.

The Negro was rushed to Beaumont for safekeeping yesterday, after he had been arrested Thursday night while in the act of accosting a couple.

NORTH CAROLINA MOB GIVES UP ATTEMPT

CONCORD (N. C.) June 28. The seven Negroes were removed to a Charlotte jail today.

Troops of Co. 3, North Carolina National Guard, were held in their barracks tonight as a precautionary measure. The troops were called out early today by Gov. Gardner.

TRANSOCEAN AIR ROUTES NEARING

Kingsford-Smith Forecasts Rapid Progress

Bases Confidence on Work of His Motors

About 80,000 Miles Covered in 800 Hours

This is the last of a series of articles written by Capt. Charles Kingsford-Smith exclusively for the Los Angeles Times, New York Times and associated newspapers, describing his flight from Port Marnock, Ireland, to Harbor Grace, N. F., and thence to Roosevelt Field, Long Island, completing the first successful east-to-west trans-Atlantic flight.

BY CAPT. CHARLES KINGSFORD-SMITH
(Commander and Chief Pilot of the Airplane Southern Cross)

(Copyright, 1930, throughout the world by the Los Angeles Times and New York Times. All right reserved.)

NEW YORK, June 28. (Exclusive) Picking up where we left off yesterday, I am going to dare the role of a prophet, a very foolish thing, perhaps, for an aviator to do. However, if we haven't learned something of value for commerce, the knitting together of peoples in far places, the saving of time in this allotted span and all the other claims that are being made for aviation, then the flights of the Southern Cross over the Pacific, the Indian Ocean and the Atlantic has been a lot of energy thrown away and a lot of money ill spent and of needless risk of human lives.

OCEAN FLYING NEAR

But I am certain that the Southern Cross, its engines and instruments have contributed to the advance of aviation and all aviation can do. I have been convinced by the old plane and her three Whirlwinds that transoceanic flying as commercial transport is just around the corner. I believe that it will be an established thing, possibly within a decade. Give us a multimotored plane equipped with the instruments and radio we have today that, under the guidance of pilots ought, above all things, to fly blind for hours at a time and that will have a cruising speed of 140 miles an hour continuously for 4000 miles, and we can fly against head winds, through fogs and storms, carrying loads across both the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Such a plane certainly is not far away.

We can be confident of that because we know what has been accomplished in the past ten years, even in the last three. Our own Fokker is 5 years of age, and there is plenty of kick in her yet. We hope to show that by establishing the first nonstop record next Wednesday, across the United States from Roosevelt Field to Oakland, Cal., in a multimotored transport.

SAME OLD MOTORS

We expect to make that flight with the same engines installed by the Wright company three years ago, motors that have flown 800 hours, close to 80,000 miles, and which are still good engines. As a matter of record the builders wanted me to put in new engines for the trans-Atlantic flight and I refused them because of my confidence in these. I would have been astonished if any one of them had failed me over the ocean or at any other time in their history. They just keep on turning over and I expect it of them.

A few years ago one couldn't count on the most carefully made motor to do what these have done and others are doing every day on the air lines of the world. Early in the war the engine makers expected engines to need complete overhauls after fifteen or twenty hours of use. They said that a fifty-hour engine was impossible. It is some step from twenty hours to 800.

When I think of this advance I am sure that I am not overenthusiastic in my prophecy. Transoceanic flights are regarded by conservative persons as stunts. One flight is unique, two may be called a coincidence, three and more should be dignified, I think, by the term "habit." The Southern Cross in much of her career has followed the paths whipped by the wings of others. In so doing the plane has helped to confirm the habit which comes before scheduled operation.

RADIO'S VALUE

Without being unduly boastful, I think I can say that the utilization of radio equipment aboard our plane in radio navigation has had something of pioneering value. It has served to bring to the attention of the world the magnificent work going on quietly and steadily in the laboratories of the world. And the electrical research workers tell us that they are just getting started. Radio has served notice again, as it did in the experimental flights for the Guggenheim fund of Lieut. James Doolittle, that it is preparing to give eyes to the blind in order that communications between man and his neighbors may be uninterrupted and quickened, in darkness and storm as well as by day and in fair weather.

All of these things, to my mind, at least, are evidence that man is going to span the ocean in heavier-than-air machines on regular schedule just as now he crosses the continent by night and day with mail, express and passengers.

In addition to the pleasure we feel in what we believe our flights and plane have accomplished, there is, of course, the personal thrill that comes to us from our reception in this country and the aid rendered us on every hand both before starting from Ireland and since our arrival here. It was just the same in Newfoundland, except on a smaller scale.

KINGSFORD-SMITH PLANS LONDON-AUSTRALIA FLIGHT

NEW YORK, June 28. (AP)—Capt. Kingsford-Smith and his companions on the Atlantic flight of the Southern Cross continued a full round of activities today, beginning with an early morning telephone call to Australia, in which Kingsford-Smith revealed that he plans to fly home from London in August.

Speaking to his mother from Schenectady, N. Y., where he had gone last night to make the call, he said in answer to her question:

"Yes, I am going to fly back from England because I can get home a little bit quicker."

Friends of the flyer here said that plans have been discussed but that nothing definite has been decided so far as they know. It is believed he may make a fast flight in an attempt to break Bert Hinkler's record of fifteen days from England to the Antipodes.

Kingsford-Smith returned to New York by airplane after the telephone conversation and with his companions started on a tour of courtesy and business calls.

Admiring crowds followed their progress from Central Park to the battery, cheering them loudly whenever they made a stop.

PICTURE OF ACTRESS BRINGS FLYER LUCK

Nell Stewart
This picture of Nell Stewart, for forty years idol of the Australian stage and darling of the older generation of that continent, flew with Capt. Kingsford-Smith on his latest conquest of the air, the hop across the Atlantic from Ireland to Newfoundland. He has carried the picture for years as a luck token.

Spends Hours Now Working Flower Beds

"I've heard a lot of wonderful things about Sargon, but I don't believe anybody ever got any finer results than I did," recently stated Mrs. J. M. Bedford, 5929 S. Wall St., Los Angeles.

"I was getting almost desperate from suffering with rheumatic pains and swellings in my hands and all my limbs. At times I could hardly dress myself or raise my hand to comb my hair. I often saw my housework go undone, and other things that I used to do with ease, such as working in my flower gardens, were out of the question. I became very weak and nervous and had the worst kind of sick headaches.

MRS. J. M. BEDFORD

"I took twelve bottles of Sargon and every trace of rheumatic pain and swelling has left me! I do my housework in 'no time' and then spend hours working in my flower beds. My nerves are worlds better, and I have strength and energy 'galore!'

"I don't know what it is to have a sick headache any more, since Sargon Pills regulated me, and they did this without disrupting me like other laxatives did. I'll praise these wonderful medicines as long as I live."

Sargon may be obtained at all Owl Drug Stores and Liggett Drug Stores in Los Angeles and other cities.—[Advertisement.

Smoot Praises Tariff Measure

SALT LAKE CITY, June 28. (AP)—Praising the recently enacted tariff bill which he sponsored as chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Senator Smoot arrived here today for a rest. He predicted the measure, which he said, "is probably the only tariff bill ever put through by a minority," will meet the approval of the American people when it gets into operation.

The Senator declined to comment on reports of his forthcoming marriage. Mrs. Smoot died in Washington more than a year ago.

FRENCH MOVES STIR ITALIANS

Council of Ministers Takes Up Defense Problems

Step Attributed to Neighbor's Activities on Frontier

New Tax Program Decided to Meet Expenses

ROME, June 28. (AP)—The Council of Ministers, with Premier Mussolini presiding, today took up national defense problems and issued a statement saying the action was taken because of France's preparations for fortifying her Italian frontier.

"Several problems inherent to the national defense" were taken up, according to the official communication.

In order to raise more money for defense the Ministers, on the Duce's recommendation, decided to increase the tax on exchange transactions and to work out a method of exacting the taxes from concerns affected by it.

In this way, the statement says, it will be possible to increase the budgets of the armed forces of Italy by 500,000,000 lire (more than $26,000,000) at the beginning of the 1930-1931 fiscal year, and with the sum for later years to be determined.

For the next year the army will receive 300,000,000 lire more, the navy 160,000,000, aviation 80,000,000 and the Black Shirt Militia 20,000,000 for equipping and arming.

The Ministers estimate that the increased taxation also will yield 15,000,000 lire more for agricultural work in the colonies, 20,000,000 for public works in Sardinia, 40,000,000 for a straight line railroad from Bologna to Florence, 30,000,000 for rural credits and 100,000,000 lire for relief of winter unemployment.

Steinway

. . . in fifty years as responsive as it is today. Many an inferior piano has an acceptable tone when it is new. But a year or two or even less, will work disastrous changes. The test of a piano lies not only in its tone, but in its ability to hold it. That is one of the great advantages of the Steinway. Time will not mar the beauty of its tone. Fifty years from now its voice will be just as lovely, just as resonant as it is today. The Steinway is a profitable long-term investment. It is built to last.

ACTOR MAKES HIS LAST BOW

Death Rings Down Curtain on Joe Schenck

Partner of Gus Van Victim of Heart Disease

End Comes Suddenly After Successful Show

DETROIT, June 28. (AP)—It was the final curtain for one of America's most famous vaudeville teams today.

Joe Schenck, who with his friend, Gus Van, sang his way out of a Brooklyn street car, through Coney Island's music halls and onto Broadway, died suddenly from heart disease in his room at the Book-Cadillac Hotel here today. He was 43 years of age.

"Van and Schenck," as theatrical bookers knew them, had been associated eighteen years. When the news fell today they had played one day of a week's engagement at the Fisher Theater here.

CARRIES ON LIKE TROOPER

Last night they sang to a packed house, took their bows and obligingly sang again. Perhaps Schenck didn't feeling any too fit then but he did his turn like the good trouper he was.

By noon today he was dead. With him when he died was Gus Van, nearly crazed with grief..

Van and Schenck became associated in Brooklyn eighteen years ago when they were holding down the two ends of a street car as conductor and conductor. They started out as entertainers at private parties and soon got into professional class.

MOTHER CHARTERS PLANE

During the time the team was singing the two singers held engagements at Coney Island, Keith and Orpheum vaudeville houses and finally large metropolitan moving-picture houses. With their earnings they became joint owners of a New York night club.

Unaware of her son's sudden death, Mrs. Margaret S. Schenck of Forest Hills, L. I., took off for Detroit in an airplane this afternoon. She had been notified of her son's illness and left from Roosevelt Field, L. I., in a specially chartered plane.

New Flight to Tokio Planned

TACOMA (Wash.) June 28. (AP)—A new nonstop flight from here to Tokio will be attempted, probably before July 15, it was definitely learned today.

The plane, a Fokker biplane powered with a twelve-cylinder, 360-horsepower Rolls-Royce motor, will be piloted by two Seattle aviators, and is scheduled to arrive at Tacoma Field this week.

The chief pilot will be Robert B. (Bob) Wark, 29 years of age. The co-pilot is Eddie L. (Red) Brown, 23. They are making preliminary changes in the plane at Boeing Field, Seattle, and will bring it to Tacoma Field, where the final flight preparations will be made.

Lifer Pomeroy Gives Up Tools

BRIDGEWATER (Mass.) June 28. (AP)—A collection of knives, files and saws was discovered in the possession of Jesse Pomeroy, confined to the State Hospital for the Criminal Insane here, it became known today.

Pomeroy is probably the most widely known "lifer," having served fifty-four years of his life behind prison bars, for murder.

VOLLMER CONDEMNS PRELIMINARY HEARING

PALO ALTO, June 28. (AP)—Abolition of preliminary hearings for persons charged with crimes is advocated by Chief of Police Vollmer of Berkeley, one of the speakers before a meeting of bay counties police officers here. The preliminary hearing, Chief Vollmer said, forces the State to show its hand and enables a criminal to prepare an alibi or a framed-up defense in advance of his trial.

BOURBONS WET IN WASHINGTON

Democratic Session Votes for Dry Act Repeal

Liquor Control's Return to States Advocated

Campaign of Bullitt Wins After "Agreement"

CENTRALIA (Wash.) June 28. (AP) Washington Democrats went wet in their convention here today, voting 250 1-4 to 116 for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. They urged the return of liquor control to States.

The vote carried out the carefully planned campaign of A. Scott Bullitt, but went through only after the militant Mrs. Edith Riley, Spokane wet, nearly caused an upset.

Mrs. Riley forced King county's 117 votes to line up with her against any indorsement of the district power bill, on threats of losing Spokane's forty-six and other Eastern Washington votes aligned with Spokane.

The caucus in which the agreement was effected drew burning comment from drys. They also assailed Bullitt although they failed to prevent his indorsement as committeeman. They assailed the agreement as a scandalous trade. Mrs. Riley denied it was a trade, saying she merely insisted on men living up to their original agreement.

THINKING CHEAP ENOUGH FOR EVERY POCKETBOOK

BOSTON, June 28. (AP) — One hour's intense mental effort is worth just one-half of a salted peanut on the heat scale.

Or it is equal to five minutes of dusting done by the parlor maid.

These calibrations are accurate determinations of the extra calories consumed by the brain during intense mental effort as compared with the calories of a brain not working hard at thinking.

They were obtained by Francis G. and Cornelia G. Benedict of the Carnegie Institution nutrition laboratory here.

MODERNIZATION MEASURE URGED

Britten Will Seek Passage of Battleship Bill

WASHINGTON, June 28. (AP)—Chairman Britten of the House Naval Committee said today he will seek immediate enactment of the Darrow bill to authorize $30,000,000 for modernization of three battleships.

Enactment at this session, he added, would prevent the laying off of between 3000 and 4000 men employed at navy yards.

The measure would authorize the modernization of the Idaho, New Mexico and Mississippi.

ARMY OFFICER'S WIFE DIES FROM POISONING

DENVER, June 28. (AP)—Mrs. Florence Cameron, 24 years of age, wife of Lieut. Robert C. Cameron, army officer, is dead today of poison taken yesterday at her home here. She died at Fitzsimons Army Hospital, where her husband had been a patient. Hospital surgeons announced she had taken poison with suicidal intent on account of ill health.

TAX REFUND APPROVED

WASHINGTON, June 28. (AP)—The joint committee of internal revenue taxation today informed Representative Garner, Democrat, Texas, that the Treasury Department has recommended a tax refund of $267,448 to the Cement Securities Company of Denver, for overassessment of income tax during 1917, 1920 and 1921.

Government Will Repatriate 5000 in Los Angeles

MEXICO CITY, June 28. (AP)—Gen. Alfredo E. Vega left today for Nogales to arrange for the return of approximately 5000 Mexicans from Los Angeles to Mexico, where they will take up residence on newly opened irrigated lands.

This return is in accordance with declarations made by President Ortiz Rubio before his inauguration that he would open the doors of Mexico to Mexicans living abroad and help them return to develop their mother country.

CANADA SAINTS TO BE HONORED

Ritual for Early Martyrs at St. Peter's Today

Eight Tortured by Indians in Seventeenth Century

Pope and Catholic Orders to Attend Ceremony

VATICAN CITY, June 28. (AP)—The first saints ever to be chosen from the North American continent, blessed Jean De Brebeuf and his seven companions who suffered martydom at the hands of Indians in Canada and Northern New York in the first half of the seventh century, will have their apotheosis tomorrow morning in St. Peter's Basilica, largest church in the Christian world.

Pope Pius XI will preside at the solemnities, entering the great structure in state, borne aloft on the sedia gestatoria or portable throne.

COLORFUL PROCESSION

Before him will move, with measured tread, one of the most colorful processions imaginable, composed of representatives of all the men's religious orders of the Catholic church.

Sternly black-clad Jesuits will have the place of honor, for it was to their famous missionary and teaching organization that the eight martyrs belonged.

Another noted member of the Society of Jesus will be raised to sainthood tomorrow, blessed Cardinal Robert Bellermine, distinguished theologian, who in a series of tracts refuted the contentions of King James I of England.

DAY FOR MARTYRS

But the day will be that of the eight martyrs, victims of the red-skinned natives they endeavored to convert, all of them shining examples of missionary zeal, abnegation, fortitude and courage under torture and in face of death.

Their canonization comes as a response to the ardent wish of Canadian and American Catholics, who have long held them in veneration and invoked their intercession in time of distress.

Father Jean de Brebeuf, a sturdy Norman, is commonly taken as their leader. Though stoned, beaten with clubs, slashed with knives, scalded with boiling water and burned with red-hot beads, he had the strength at the end to kiss the stake to which the Indians were preparing to tie him, as he saw his martydom approaching. He was burned to death near Georgian Bay, Canada, in 1649.

GERMANY WITHDRAWS FROM TRADE PACT

BERLIN, June 28. (AP)—The German government today notified the League of Nations it will not consider itself bound after July 1 to the international agreement of November 8, 1927, for the abolition of prohibitions or restrictions on imports and exports. The agreement had been in force subject to ratification by Poland and Czecho-Slovakia.

A Million and a Quarter
PLUS
A Million and a Quarter

To get a true 1930 picture of the Los Angeles market, advertisers must look at the new census figures with both eyes.

Through one eye they see the city of Los Angeles with its 1,231,830 consumers — people who live within the definitely defined city limits.

But a broader two-eye view of the market that really exists — the composite of Los Angeles city, suburbs, adjacent communities and surrounding countryside — shows a vast population of 2,500,000 . . . A city of a million and a quarter people surrounding a city of like size!

Local advertisers, familiar with the built-up, trolley-connected structure of this great retail trading area, know that the million and a quarter people outside the city form a customer group equally as important as that within the city.

Hence, to reach both halves of this market, advertisers must get more than just city circulation. They must have circulation that spreads over the entire market. Such a circulation is available through the Los Angeles Times with its huge morning coverage — the largest inside the city, the largest in the county and throughout the whole Los Angeles retail zone. Furthermore, the Los Angeles Times exceeds EVERY other Los Angeles newspaper in number of homes reached by carrier.

situation far from romantic. He is already learning that unless he is

Hence the cold-blooded statesmen of Europe are watching the developments in Bucharest in any but a romantic state of mind. They are fearful that the king who has been so unstable in his affairs with women will prove equally unstable in dealing with dangerous elements of policy; and they are preparing to get the best for themselves, on the one hand, or to help put down any dangerous fire on the other.

TROUBLES HE MUST FACE

Here are some of the factors with which he will have to deal with the utmost tact and skill:

The Liberal party, composed largely of industrialists and landlords, has long been hostile to him. It compelled his exile and resisted his return. It is bitter because he came back under the auspices of the Peasant party and has even talked of a republic.

His own supporters in the Peasant-sweeping reforms in the way of rein the matter of conditions of in-not be instituted without clashes with the landlords and industrialists, who are determined to keep their privileges.

AROL'S THRONE IMPERILED BY PLOTS ON ALL SIDES

ndholders, Communists and Republicans Oppose Him; Nations Take Sides

BY EUGENE J. YOUNG

EW YORK, June 28. (Exclusive)—The world at large, glad to a little romance thrown into its consciousness, has been ding in a Balkan true story of a throne seized, a boy king de- ed, two queens in rivalry for power, a third woman in the kground and trying for the foreground—in fact, enough of a to rank with the best that has been done by Anthony Hope other painters of such romance.

King Carol—who seized the n of Rumania—is finding the ion far from romantic. own supporters in the Peasant and the Nationalists will ex- him to back their program of reforms in the way of re- of the land to the farmers and battle of conditions of in- labor. These reforms can- be instituted without clashes the landlords and industrial- who are determined to keep r privileges.

The country is not in good condition economically or financially. It must have loans. Many of the people in Bessarabia resent the fact that they cannot trade with Russia and many Transylvanians are equally resentful because they cannot trade freely and naturally in the Danube Valley and have to turn for commerce to the land across the mountains which absorbed them.

The royal family is not deep-rooted, having been grafted on the country only fifty years ago, and it has lost much prestige by its various recent quarrels and eccentricities.

FOREIGN TROUBLES

But these domestic problems, bad as they are, may at any time be overshadowed by even worse foreign troubles. Every great power of Europe has its finger in the Rumanian pie.

France, at the moment, takes the favored position. Carol had asylum in that country in his years of exile and had freedom to carry on his intrigues for return and no obstacles were put in his way when the time came. In fact, a great French diplomatic mission had just carried on some sort of negotiations in Bucharest when Carol made his descent on the country and a French military mission is even now helping with the reorganization of the army. France's main purpose is to keep Rumania tied to the Little Entente in defense of the Paris peace settlements.

Against this pro-French attitude will be brought many strong attacks. Italy has been trying to turn Rumania Fascist and bring the country into a powerful alliance with herself, Hungary and Bulgaria. Germany is trying to renew her old policy of alliances all along the Danube so that she may reach the Black Sea and the Near East. Britain is trying to keep a grip on the situation so as to be sure that neither Russia nor Germany will be able to approach too close to the Turkish straits. And Russia is conducting her own radical campaign to make Rumania into another soviet republic which would fall in with the Russian desire for an outlet on the warm seas.

ROYAL FAMILY DIVIDED

All these things Carol has to face without the help of disinterested aid and counsel form his own family; for, as has been made evident to the world at large, the royal household is bitterly divided. And this situation is made the worse because the differences are not only personal and moral, but they are political. Royalty can always find a way to live in apparent harmony and gloss over immorality in the interests of the dynasty, if the differences are merely personal. But when great nations are interested in these differences, then they almost defy composition.

TWO SEIZED WHEN WELL YIELDS BODY

Widow and Teamster Put in Custody After Finding of Corpse Near La Honda

LA HONDA, June 28. (AP)—The recovery of the body of Frank Roderick, La Honda rancher, from the bottom of a filled-in abandoned well on his ranch today sent his 33-year-old widow and James M. Craney, 50, teamster, as prisoners to the County Jail where William Woodring, 44, a neighboring rancher, has been held since May 15 as the result of a secret investigation.

No charge has been placed against the prisoners, but they are expected to be subjected to severe questioning.

First indications of trouble in the San Mateo county range lands came eight months ago when Sheriff's deputies went to the Roderick ranch to investigate asserted cattle rustling. Roderick and Woodring were closely questioned but no arrests were made. Then the matter rested until May 20, when Mrs. Roderick came to the District Attorney and said her husband had beaten her, dressed up in his "Sunday clothing," taken $2800 in cash and left with a "red-headed woman."

A warrant charging battery was sworn against Roderick, but he was not seen again until his body, with the skull battered in, was found beneath debris in the well. He was dressed in overalls in contrast to the story of his disappearance told by Mrs. Roderick.

JUNGLE PRISON HORRORS TOLD

Angeleno in London from French Guiana

Describes Brutality of Soldier Guard

Convict Tied to Tree Eaten Alive by Ants

LONDON, June 28. (Exclusive)—After eight and a half months in the jungle prison camps of French Guiana, inland from Devil's Island, W. E. A. Booth of Los Angeles has returned to civilization, charging unheard-of brutalities and even murder of the most fiendish sort against the soldiery guarding the convicts.

Booth came out of the jungles wrecked by tropical diseases and has spent five months in a London hospital recovering from his ordeal.

He asserts that stories of crime trickling from the penal camps where crime is supposed to be punished and corrected drove him to an elaborate plan whereby he ingratiated himself with both soldiers and convicts, and finally purposely stranded himself there in order to see for himself. He became a member of the camp, and witnessed three murders, he says, before he managed to escape last August.

CONVICT KILLS SOLDIER

One of the most horrible tales Booth tells is of the death of a prisoner named Jean Brock. During the last trip he made to the island Booth says he stood on deck superintending part of the unloading by the convicts. The heat in the hold was stifling, and one of the prisoners, covered with sweat and bare to the waist, finally found it unbearable. He leaped out of the hold and ran for water.

One of the guards began lashing him with a whip and Brock scurried back into the hold under the sting of the whip, which cut his bare shoulders.

When the prisoners were called up at the end of the day the soldier again began beating Brock with his whip. Suddenly, Booth narrates, the convict grasped a wire sling used in hoisting cargo, and, whimpering under the pain of the lash, rained savage blows on the soldier's head with the wire.

Before the guards could overpower Brock the soldier lay unconscious and three days later he died.

Booth meantime had become a member of the colony and waited with everyone else for the expected execution of the convict.

TIED TO TREE

For five days Brock was locked in his underground cell and the guillotine in the camp stood unused. On the sixth day Brock was brought up and placed in line with the prisoners cutting a road through the jungle, and to everyone's amazement, was marched away.

That evening as the men returned, Brock was missing and Booth said the faces of the other convicts were white with fear. No one spoke, but during the night Booth learned Brock's fate. The following day he went to see.

Alone in the jungle he came upon the dying man, hanging, like one crucified, by his manacles, which were chained around the trunk of a large tree. His feet, resting on the ground, were also manacled. His strength was almost gone and his parched throat gave harsh, hysterical cries for water as he tried in vain to reach his face with his hands.

The reason was that myriads of ants and other tropical insects were slowly eating the man alive.

He died that day and his body was brought back for burial so that all the convicts could see.

Second Victim of Church Jealousy Shooting Dies; Husband Says "Good"

"Good," he drawled, and turned over on his bench, and went to sleep again.

Ross's victims now number two. Rev. Edgard R. Wood, who was killed in his pulpit, and Mrs. Ross, whose associations with the clergyman aroused the husband's ire. Leonard Towe, 27 years of age, a member of the congregation, also under suspicion by the husband, was wounded, but is expected to recover.

STALIN HAILED AT RED RALLY

Communist Chief Dominates Party Congress

Ovation Follows Seven-Hour Burst of Oratory

American Financial Slump Given Attention

MOSCOW, June 28. (AP)—In the ornate National Operahouse, where once Russia's emperors and nobles sat in glittering gold and velvet boxes, Joseph Stalin today was hailed as the strong man of the Communist party.

Stalin has been head of the party, but there have been recent rumors his rule might be nearing an end. Today, however, he devoted seven hours to exhausting oratory and at the end the 2000 delegates of the sixteenth congress of the All-Union Communists party rose to their feet for a tremendous ovation.

It was a strange scene. Every one of the ninety-six nationalities within the soviet union was represented. There was every conceivable type of face, male and female, and all styles of dress appeared to be represented in the vast audience which in its variety resembled a great ethnological museum display.

FIERY LANGUAGE

Looking surprisingly well and vigorous despite his recent illness and enormous burden of work, Stalin spoke with his old-time energy and aggressiveness. With fiery language he warned members they must continue their onslaught on capitalism, the Kulaks and other enemies of the proletarian dictatorship.

The ovation to the soviet leader came when he said the party never has been so strongly united around its central committee as at present.

Stalin spoke at length on the international situation and told delegates world capitalism and imperialism are decaying, while the soviet proletarian dictatorship is ascending steadily.

STOCK SLUMP CITED

He remarked that the financial slump in the United States, which has affected the whole world, is the most serious of all economic tragedies, commenting that while there are 20,000,000 unemployed in the principal capitalistic countries there is "a terrific and unprecedented industrial movement forward" in the soviet union.

Stalin said the economic struggle among great capitalistic powers such as Great Britain and the United States is becoming more intense, the main areas of competition being China, South America and the British dominions, with the advantage on the side of the United States.

OLD MARRIAGE RECORDS KEPT

Weddings Held Important by Pioneer Officials

Births, Deaths Not Filed by Early Californians

Statistics Destroyed in San Francisco Fire

SACRAMENTO, June 28. (AP)—Marriage must have seemed more important than birth or death to early-day Californians, if old records of vital statistics may be taken as an indication. Marriage records were kept faithfully from the earliest days in the State's history, while deaths were registered in desultory fashion, and records of births in many counties were incomplete or lacking.

Greatly increased demand for birth certificates recently has led the State Department of Public Health to investigate keeping of records by counties prior to the State Vital Statistics Act, which became effective in July, 1905. Certificates of births occurring prior to that date must be secured from county recorders, the State authorities pointed out.

It was found that registration of marriages began in Sonoma county in 1846, four years before the State government was organized. These marriage records were made under the Bear Flag government. Many counties were found to have marriage records dating back to the early '50's. This is true especially in the mountain counties where mining camps flourished, and in other counties organized early in the history of the State.

No birth or marriage records for San Francisco are available for the years prior to April 18, 1906, as they were destroyed in the fire of that date. A few death certificates were saved from the flames, most of them being dates in the early '60's and '70's.

In general, health officials said, birth and death registration was not considered complete prior to July, 1905.

HOOVER VACATION UP IN AIR

Stretching Out of Congressional Session Now Jeopardizing Plans for Mountain Tour

WASHINGTON, June 28. (AP)—Like many another in Washington, President Hoover is finding his vacation plans complicated by the length of the Congressional session.

A month from now, he had expected to leave for a tour of the West, but with the regular session still on and the difficulty of estimating how much time the Senate will devote to the London naval treaty, arrangements for the trip are being held in abeyance.

SILENT ON PLANS

Mr. Hoover has consistently declined to discuss a proposed itinerary even with his aides, and it was said today he does not intend taking up the question until there is some definite indication of how much longer Congress will keep at work.

In his original announcement of the trip, the President said he expected to leave the capital about August 1 and spend the month visiting the national parks of the Rocky Mountains. Since then, plans for the jaunt have become more obscure, it is said. However, he still plans to visit the national parks.

The situation has been further complicated by urging of Ambassador Morrow that Mr. Hoover carry through before fall his proposed visit to Mexico City.

Mr. Morrow expects to resign as Ambassador during September and he strongly urged President Hoover to visit Mexico while he is still there. While declining to say what reply he had been given, the Ambassador appeared confident as he left the White House that the trip will be made.

OTHER INVITATIONS

Whether, if the President does visit the Latin-American republics, he will shorten his tour of the western States and cross the border from Texas or California, or will wait until later in the fall, is one of the questions that is under consideration by those who are gathering data for his vacation.

As Congress hangs on and there appears the possibility that the western trip may have to be eliminated, invitations are being received for Mr. Hoover to visit other sections of the country. John Hays Hammond of Washington has renewed only this week his invitation for the President to visit his estate at Gloucester, Mass.

PRESIDENT SEEKS REST IN MOUNTAINS

ORANGE (Va.) June 28. (AP)—President Hoover sought the cool breeze of his mountain fishing camp today in the first respite he has had in two weeks from the pressing problems that have heaped on his desk in the last days of Congress.

Leaving the worries of veterans' legislation and his law-enforcement commission behind, the Chief Executive motored to the camp, where Mrs. Hoover has been recuperating for the last several weeks from injuries suffered in a fall at the White House.

So sudden was his decision to spend the week-end in the mountains that his party was minus the group of guests that usually accompanies him. Only Secretary Hurley and Assistant Secretaries David S. Ingalls of Navy and F. H. Payne of War, and his personal physician, Joel T. Boone, made the trip.

GLE FINANCE LEWS STUDIED

Firm's Records Being Scanned

M" Account Links Police and Crooks

Beer Tax Levy by Reporter Checked

CHICAGO, June 28. (Exclusive)—"C. and M." joint account in a brokerage house, in which Fred F. Russell, former Police Lieutenant, and Jimmy Mondi, Chicago vice and gambling dive keeper, also had accounts, today was under scrutiny of the investigators seeking to find out who killed Alfred (Jake) Lingle, Chicago Tribune reporter.

Investigators were also seeking a connecting link between the police department and the bootleg and gambling world today in the tangled financial affairs of Lingle, who was Russell's intimate friend.

LINGLE ACCOUNTS

The brokerage house which had Russell's account and also the account of Jimmy Mondi, notorious for years as a large-scale gambling-house operator, was the Harry Massey Company.

Henry Cortesman, now a bond salesman, was trader for the defunct Massey Company. He admitted today that Russell, then a police captain, and Mondi had accounts with the Massey firm.

Lingle, it was learned today, had accounts with four brokerage firms in the last few days — Lamson Brothers, Jackson, Bossel & Co.; Stein, Alstrin & Co., Hotel Sherman branch, and Charles Sincere & Co.

LOOP BEER TAX

Chief among the clews being following by the State's Attorney's investigators are the reported substantial bank deposits made in 1928 in the heyday of the slot-machine racket. A number of police captains and gangsters were indicted for conspiracy in the slot-machine ring, but walked out of court through the refusal of David Rockola, machine manufacturer, to testify.

The investigators also were trying to corner reports prevalent in the Loop for months that $5 a barrel excise tax was being levied by Lingle on Loop beer for the "fix." They were trying to discover also who gave the "word from the hall," that has stopped and started the beer taps working in the Loop at intervals for the last two years.

BENEDICT ARNOLD TAINT ON OLD DESK EFFACED

WASHINGTON, June 28. (AP)—Although Benedict Arnold once used an old desk recently presented to the Military Academy, War Department officials are satisfied it never belonged to him and said today it deserves a place as a valuable memento of Revolutionary times.

Arnold sat at the desk only during his brief stay at the point before deserting to the British, but so did every commanding officer there during the revolutionary period. George Washington wrote letters on it during visits to the fort.

The desk recently was given to the academy by Mrs. Helen H. Denton of California. The question arose if it were owned originally by America's most notorious traitor.

After inquiry Maj.-Gen. William R. Smith, West Point commandant, said it first belonged to Col. Beverly Robinson, a Virginian, school mate of Washington and staunch patriot.

STATES OF WEST CLOSE UP RANKS

Governors' Conference Knits Stronger Bonds

Reorganization of Group to Push Development

Resolutions Passed Cover Topics of Import

SALT LAKE CITY, June 28. (Exclusive)—A militant organization for the development of the West was formed today at the closing session of the conference of governors of the eleven western States. A reorganization of the year-old body was effected by cementing and unifying the forces of the Pacific Coast and mountain States.

The reorganization purpose was to make the conference an active and continuing body assembling and coordinating the results of regional activities for the development of the West. At the closing resolutions were passed dealing with reclamation, public domain, water control, standardization of irrigation district laws, study of the silver market by Federal agencies, financing of reclamation projects and a survey of the resources of the West by land-grant colleges.

OFFICERS ELECTED

Supplementing its action of Friday in naming Gov. Emerson of Wyoming chairman of the conference for the ensuing year, the "Conference of the Governors of the Western States," as it is now officially known, named Gov. Emerson president and Gov. Phillips of Arizona, vice-president.

The governors elected the executive committee of three, to consist of the president, vice-president and Gov. Dern of Utah.

Gov. Emerson designated as secretary of the conference for the ensuing year his own secretary, Gregory S. Powell of Cheyenne. A talk on the activities and policies of the Federal Farm Board to date given by a member of the board, former Gov. McKelvie of Nebraska, was an outstanding feature of the morning session.

The attitude of the Secretary of the Interior, Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, proved to be the storm center of the conference, but for reasons which seemed sufficient to themselves the members of the resolutions committee ignored that subject, which had been discussed in vigorous language.

FUNCTION OF BODY

Organization was perfected on the theory that the conference of western governors will proceed on a somewhat more definite and more aggressive line of action in the future than it did in the year since it was organized. As now planned the conference will be an all-year body, functioning as a clearinghouse when matters arise that are germane to all the western States and ready to take action at any time on such matters if they are deemed of sufficient importance.

Some of the matters covered in the conference and touched upon by resolutions will be passed on to the conference of governors, which will open here Monday morning. Resolutions passed by the reclamation conference declaring for a uniform policy on reclamation matters was reaffirmed by the western governors.

The identity of the stabber has not been learned.

BEACH OIL POLLUTION WILL BE PROSECUTED

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, June 28. (Exclusive)—Representative Swing, who assisted in getting the Anti-Oil Pollution Act of 1924 through Congress, acting on numerous complaints from individuals and civic organizations in Southern California against oil pollution of the beaches, has asked stricter enforceemnt of the act by the Secretary of War, charged with its enforcement, the Secretary of the Navy and the Coast Guard.

Representative Swing has received assurances of both the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy that hearty co-operation will be given in an effort to obtain greater protection of the Pacific Coast beaches and that the Coast Guard will be asked to keep on the outlook for violators and see that they are prosecuted.

FINANCIAL

STOCK VALUES TO SET RECORD

June Transactions on Local Market Ranked High

Total Will Exceed Previous Months This Year

Six Months' Figure Placed at $150,000,000

Stock transactions valued at more than $41,000,000 at market prices were executed this month by brokers on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange. This is far in excess of the volume for any preceding month of the year, and for the half-year to end tomorrow will materially shorten the wide gap in the exchange business compared with last year's high rate of operations.

More than 1,000,000 shares changed hands on the stock exchange for the current month up to yesterday, which were valued at trading prices of $41,249,986. This is almost double the value of dealings in June, 1929, when 740,000 shares crossed the board with a market valuation of $22,895,678.

COMPARISONS MADE

Trading figures for other months this year show May transactions to have had a market value of $25,000,000; April $28,000,000 and March $23,500,000, while both February and January fell below the $20,000,000 level. Last year monthly transactions only in January, March and October surpassed the volume of the current month to date.

At the close of tomorrow's session the market value of the combined transactions for the half-year will be more than $150,000,000. The value up to yesterday aggregated $150,045,199, which compares with transactions to the same date a year ago of $237,045,910 and represents a decrease of $87,000,711, or 32 per cent. Transactions up to the end of May were nearly 50 per cent lower than for the same period last year.

VOLUME OFF

The number of shares that have changed hands since the first of the year aggregated 5,509,617, against 9,837,500 shares for the same period a year ago. Both figures include the trading of rights, and the total for last year includes the trading of a number of stocks of small price denominations which were later ruled off the board.

The exchange averages of thirty common stocks issued daily, having a base of 100 as of January 31, 1929, stood at 68.7 at yesterday's close. This is 1.3 points above the bottom since the averages have been compiled, the low having been established last Wednesday. The bottom price for 1929 was not hit immediately after the fall crash but was recorded on December 30, at 73.1. The peak for last year was marked May 11 at 103.5 and for this year on April 7 at 85.1. On June 26, 1929, the averages stood at 97.3.

BEARS KEEP IN CONTROL OF MARKET

Trading Tone for Week Shows No Change from Three Predecessors

NEW YORK, June 28. (AP)—The grand bear barbecue in the stock market has dragged wearily through its fourth week. By today the bears had mostly either gone to sleep, or gone home.

This carnival of pessimists has monopolized the speculative pastures so long the bulls have grown too lean, or too timid, to charge in and take command, as they might normally be expected to do under the circumstances.

Bearish efforts during the week have been increasingly ineffectual, and trading has lagged until today the turnover on the stock exchange was the smallest in nearly two years.

Stock prices, as measured by the standard statistics index of ninety shares actually show a gain for the week of 1 4-5 points, although the index was depressed Tuesday to a new low for the year, the lowest level since the troublesome days of November. The index of twenty rails actually broke through the November bottom, and recorded the lowest level since 1927.

With the market apparently dragging on bottom, Wall street is perplexed that no violent technical rebound occurs. The fact seems to be, speculators for the rise have had such bad luck during the last two months they haven't the courage to resume aggressive operations until business news becomes favorable enough to give them a decided advantage in dealing with the bears.

BROKERS URGE DISCRETION

Stock Exchange Members See Good Opportunities in Well Chosen Issues

What Spring-street brokers think of the present condition of the stock market and the probable future course of prices is summarized in the following opinions:

That stocks are passing thro strong hands was strikingly indicated by Thursday's New York report, showing a decrease for the week in brokers' loans of over $371,000,000. This reduction in margin account borrowings can only mean that cash buyers are out in force picking up stocks believed to be bargains. Such purchases seldom find their way soon back into the market and add a distinct element of stability. Regardless of the immediate course of prices, lower interest rates now coming into effect make attractive for their income return quite an imposing list of seasoned dividend stocks.—John O. Knight, Los Angeles Investment Securities Company.

During the week there were a number of disturbing factors and the news in general was not particularly encouraging, but this fact must not be lost sight of: That the current low levels of productive activity which may continue into the near-by months are sure to create moderate deficits of goods which must later be filled. This, therefore, forecasts some bulge in production and sales volume in the fall. The market will probably have to stand further news of decreases in earnings in both rails and industrials, but to the far-sighted investor who realizes that neither fundamentally or permanently is there anything wrong with the American business situation it is a period possible to discover many opportunities to purchase securities at very reasonable prices.—J. D. Kennedy, H. J. Barneson & Co.

Beyond stating that the industrial stocks have shown increasing resistance and that the quality of the selling appears to be deteriorating, there is little that can be said about the market. The rail shares went to new lows during the past week, but not on volume liquidation. General character of news is unchanged, but under the surface there is a feeling that representative stocks have come very close to discounting fully the situation as it exists, even though recovery promises to be slow and uneven.—Norman B. Courtenay, E. A. Pierce & Co.

The market has reached a stage of extreme midsummer lethargy, with the lowest volume of trading for many months during the Saturday session. Quieting down of trading activity indicates a drying-up of liquidation and a reluctance on the part of the short interests to further extend themselves for the time being. Although rallies lately have been weak, there is likelihood of greater activity on the upside during the next few days. It is well for those on the constructive side to ignore moderate rallies and use recessions for long-term commitments. It now appears that we are in the midst of a buyers' market that in all probability is not destined to last overlong. On the theory, however, that active operations for the rise will be held in abeyance for some time to come, it should prove safest for the present to confine constructive commitments to the issues of companies whose average net earnings through lean and good years assure a maintenance of present dividend rates.—Wilcox Drake, Wilcox Drake & Co.

Market action during the week just closed was peculiarly inconclusive so far as indicating any definite trend. Periods of marked weakness were followed by surprising demonstrations of strength, time and again, with a kaleidoscopic speed most bewildering to the observer. Recognizing the possibility of somewhat lower levels in the next month, we see no reason to change our previously expressed warning to guard against an excess of pessimism. In the present phase of the market constructive news will be very little in evidence. The careful long pull investor will have buying opportunities of an unusual character.—Frank L. Gardner, Banks, Huntley & Co.

The market should offer desirable trading opportunities during the current week. During the four approaching sessions traders will be inclined to even-up their accounts in anticipation of the week-end holiday and at the same time the July investment demand, variously estimated at $1,000,000,000, may be expected to exert its influence upon the price structure. We feel that such rallies as develop should be used for reducing one's commitments in anticipation of poor second-quarter reports that will make their appearance in the latter part of July. It is expected that these reports will be of such an adverse character that an advancing market in the face of the same is unlikely. Conditions in the oil industry and the technical position of the shares of companies therein is still such as to make us feel that a lightening up of holdings in this group is desirable.—Frank F. Hargear, Sutro & Co.

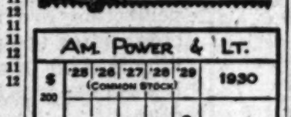
Good opinion believes bears have been unable to break through former lows of last November or precipitate any great amount of public selling. Earnings statements and dividend announcements, which will no doubt present many shocks, will start coming out immediately after the holidays, indicating a hectic market during that time. We do not feel that there will be any sharp, sustained rally until this news has been published and is out of the way. However, our long looked-for business improvement will probably steal up on the market and leave it struggling at or below present discount levels before prices actually turn into a definite upward swing.—Fred F. Schader, Dean Witter & Co.

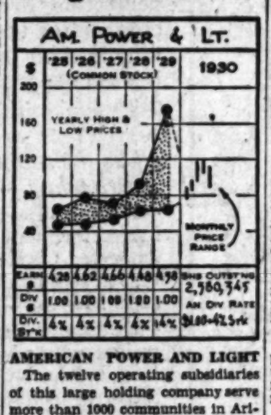
WESTERN AIR BUSINESS UP

Increase in Passenger Traffic Reported at 100 Per Cent Over Last Year; System Expanded

BY EARLE E. CROWE

Remarkable increases in the last several months in the volume of passenger travel over air lines are justifying the faith of the pioneer companies in air transportation. Despite the newness of the idea and the occasional bursts of unfavorable publicity, the recent passenger statistics of established lines strongly indicate the indorsement by the traveling public of the new mode of rapid transportation.





AMERICAN POWER AND LIGHT

The twelve operating subsidiaries of this large holding company serve more than 1000 communities in Arizona, Florida, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Oregon, Texas, Washington and Wisconsin, including a population in excess of 3,300,000. Approximately 82 per cent of the company's revenue is derived from sales of electric light and power, with gas accounting for another 10 per cent and miscellaneous sources the balance. American Power and Light is prominently identified with the Electric Bond and Share group of utilities and is supervised by the latter company.

Consolidated net income for 1929 was $19,271,484, as against $15,623,320 in 1928, an increase of more than 19 per cent. With a current ratio of 8 to 1 and a large working capital, financial position is unimpeachable.

CAPITALIZATION

Funded debt	$45,819,200
$6 pfd. stock (no par) shares	792,830
$5 pfd. stock series "A" (no par) shares	972,368
Common stock (no par) shares	2,560,345

Current Data: With a long and satisfactory record, American Power and Light would be one of the leading beneficiaries from the consummation of the proposed merger of Electric Bond and Share properties.

Western Air Express, the pioneer in Southern California, is reported, for example, to be flying almost at capacity on all its major routes. Current passenger business, according to this report, is running approximately 100 per cent ahead of last year.

NEW TRANSPORT DUE

San Francisco-Los Angeles and Los Angeles-Kansas City travel are the most popular in this company's network of air routes. The Western Air management recently introduced on the San Francisco-Los Angeles service its two F-32 Fokker transports, and shortly expects to receive the third of the five transports of this type purchased.

With these large planes in service, the Western Air Express expects in time to show a profit on its passenger business. Even with the volume of business running at its present high rate, it is hardly likely that any of the transport companies are making money on passenger travel. But the larger planes, carrying three times the number of passengers at one-third increase in cost, are believed to hold the secret of successful operation.

Fifteen more of the thirty-two-passenger transports are under option to Western Air, and will be installed on other routes when and if delivery is made.

Part of the enormous increase in Western Air business is attributable to the material expansion in the network of lines over last year. At this time a year ago, Western Air was flying about 3000 miles. Now the total daily average runs more than 15,000 miles.

EXTENSIONS MADE

The largest increase in mileage was effected through the absorption of Aero Corporation of California, operating from Los Angeles to El Paso. Since this step, Western Air Express has extended the line from El Paso to Dallas; from Amarillo, Tex., to Tulsa, Okla., and from Amarillo to Dallas. In conjunction with Midcontinent Air Express, Western Air has also inaugurated a line from Denver to El Paso.

West Coast Air Transport, flying from San Francisco to Seattle, and Midcontinent Air Express, running from Denver to Albuquerque to Kansas City, are controlled by Western Air interests, and are expected shortly to come under the same corporate set-up.

During July, the first month of the new government fiscal year, it is expected that final announcements on the award of new air-mail contracts will be made. As one of the oldest and strongest operators in the Western States, the Western Air Express expects to share largely in the allotment of new contracts.

Sharon Hoop Status Told

SHARON (Pa.) June 28.—Commenting today on the position of the Sharon Steel Hoop Company, directors issued the following statement: "The company is in a strong financial position. It is carrying a large amount of cash on deposit and investment securities bought in the open market during the last few months, and has in the treasury its own bonds in anticipation of the sinking fund for a number of years. Business is slow and probably will show a gradual increase during the coming months. It is deemed wise to conserve the present excellent current position of the company until a more definite forward movement in business is in evidence.

"Current assets as of May 31, after deducting reserves for inventory adjustments and for accounts receivable were $7,772,403 and current liabilities totaled $1,165,800. Of current assets $3,235,235 were in cash and marketable securities."

McGhee Heads Neon Company

William J. McGhee was yesterday elected president and general manager of Arora Products, Inc., manufacturers of Neon signs, succeeding Edward V. Carter, who remains on the directorate.

Mr. McGhee has been with the company since last December and was formerly vice-president. Under his direction the company has instituted an extensive expansion program which has included the opening of offices in San Francisco and San Diego.

Illinois Power Net Earnings Show Increase

CHICAGO, June 28.—For the twelve months ended May 31, last, the Illinois Power and Light Corporation, including subsidiaries, reported net income of $7,611,890 after all charges including depreciation, interest, taxes and prior charges of subsidiaries. This compares with $6,303,533 in the preceding twelve months.

Gross income for the period totaled $37,608,401, compared with $36,315,671 in the previous twelve months. After the payment of preferred dividends the balance available for common stock and surplus was $4,180,990, which compares with $3,187,672 in the 1929 period.

Profit for May totaled $1,421,483 after all charges excepting depreciation and interest, against $1,331,737 in May, 1929. Gross for the five months' period amounted to $3,094,575, against $3,096,860.

Net of Western Pacific Rail Off

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28. (Exclusive)—A net operating deficit of $579,898 was reported by the Western Pacific Railroad today for the five months ended May 31, last, as compared with an operating profit of $625,505 in the corresponding period last year, or a decrease of $1,205,403 in net revenues. Operating revenues for the period fell off $873,531, or from $6,477,268 last year to $5,603,737 for 1930. In releasing the statement, Western Pacific officials stated the decrease in operating revenue is due to the general decrease in business, except perishable traffic originating in California and moving principally eastward, and to the continuing decline in passenger business.

Heavy expenditures resulting from the continuation of the improvement program and ordinary maintenance of way and structures brought about an increase of $214,714 in operating expenses, which aggregated $4,853,114 in the first five months of this year, against $5,638,390 a year ago. This leaves a deficit in net operating revenue of $249,377 this year, against a profit of $838,868.

CORPORATE TRUST TO MAKE RIGHTS OFFER

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28. (Exclusive)—Holders of Corporate Trust shares on the 30th inst. will be given the right to reinvest the portion of the semiannual distribution payable on that date in additional Corporate Trust shares at 5 per cent under the market price of the shares at the time the right is exercised, it was announced today.

MERGER OF MACHINERY UNITS MADE

American Company Buys Other Manufacturer of Laundry Equipment

WILMINGTON, June 28.—Stockholders of General Laundry Machinery Corporation today approved the sale of certain of the company's assets to the American Laundry Machinery Company. Properties sold involve a consideration in excess of $1,500,000.

Through the purchase American Laundry acquires the name of the General Company, its good will, patents, drawings, other intangibles and the usable inventions pertaining to the laundry machinery business. The American also will acquire the use of the General Company's plant at Chicago either by purchase or by short-term lease.

The new company will be formed to acquire those assets to be retained by the General Laundry. The new company will be called the Tolhurst Works, which is one of the companies combined with the Willey-Ellis Company at the time of the formation of the General in May, 1927. The company manufactures centrifugal machinery and recently purchased the rights to a progressive machine for the paper-mill industry. It will take over the grain-dryer business of the former Ellis Company which was a part of the General Corporation.

Motor Concern Loss Reported

NEW YORK, June 28.—Continental Motors Corporation reported today net loss for six months ended April 30, of $884,288 after depreciation and other charges including development expenses of Continental Aircraft Company and before special charges amounting to $4,583,969 charged against surplus.

This compared with net profits of $562,415, or 27 cents a share on 2,113,000 capital shares in the same period a year ago. Profit and loss surplus after charging off $4,583,969 for adjustment of special tools, dies and patterns, provision for obsolescence and losses in inventories and other write-offs, amounted to $4,208,109.

MAY BUSINESS TREND DOWN

Monthly Review Says Psychological Setback Due to Failure of Expected Spring Rally

WASHINGTON, June 24. (Exclusive)—Trade and industry in May declined slightly below that of April, says Frank Greene in his monthly review of general business conditions in Nation's Business, published by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. At the same time, he adds, business suffered from a psychological setback in May due to the realization that the expected spring rally failed to materialize.

"On the other hand," Mr. Greene writes, "May witnessed better weather and crop conditions than had been anticipated, and a concededly early start toward what at this still early date looks like a fairly good agricultural season."

Continuing, Mr. Green says:

The early part of May saw a sharp downward reaction in the stock market, in which disappeared the hopes of many who had expected to recoup their losses of last fall. Later there came a demonstration that a rally in commodity prices was stil in the future. Accompanying this was a slowing down of iron and steel production, a demonstrated production of lumber in excess of the requirements of new building, and the culmination of somewhat smaller than hoped-for spring production and sales of automobiles.

BUILDING GAINS

There was, it is true, an expansion of public construction, a large part of which was road and highway work. The influence of cheap money in the encouragement of new residential building, however, was decidedly negatived by evidences that in most areas there was already sufficient housing.

It would not be fair to infer that the month was without many redeeming features. Perhaps the most encouraging was the demonstration, notwithstanding the continuance of prices as a whole toward a lower level, that an immense purchasing power existed for copper—at a price. Another encouraging feature was supplied by wool, which, after a year-long decline, steadied abroad. This steadiness was reflected in better buying of some but not all grades here at home.

In cotton a real curtailment of production was announced, with three-fourths of the country's spinning capacity pledged to reduce output. In soft coal, it was learned that consumers' stocks were at the low point of eight years.

In the automobile trade, while the greater part of the concededly large output of cars was of the smaller sizes, the fact that these were turned out in vast numbers was a demonstration also of buying power, likewise at a price.

Proof of the partial emergence of wheat fro mthe old crop and supply conditions was had in late May and early June in a level of prices up to those of mid-April, this on reports of crop damage here and in Canada, and of considerably less than last year's yields indicated in Europe.

May and early June prices, in fact, saw a rather distinct gain over the prices ruling a year before, although it will be recalled that wheat prices were at their lowest ebb in the last days of May, 1929. However, the registering of higher quotations than those of a year ago, rather than lower, in this particular market will probably be regarded as a gain.

RAILS SUFFER

The railroads, like other people, had their troubles in May, largely in the shape of receding car loadings. Heavily reduced gross and net

WOOLEN GROUP IN TROUBLE

Announcement in Advertisement of Price Agreement Leads to Sherman Antitrust Suit

BY JOHN F. SINCLAIR

[Copyright, 1930, by the North American Newspaper Alliance]

NEW YORK, June 28.—When the Wool Institute last December innocently published in the New York Journal of Commerce an advertisement announcing that 135 mills would definitely maintain their established spring prices on all duplicates of new business for the spring of 1930, it did not realize what was coming.

Atty.-Gen. Mitchell, believing this to be in restraint of trade, investigated, and yesterday he asked for an injunction restraining the Wool Institute on the ground that such an act is a direct violation of the Sherman antitrust laws.

The complaint sets forth that this trade association and the other defendants "have engaged in a conspiracy to restrain trade and have actually restrained throughout the said period and are now restraining interstate commerce and trade commerce, in woolen goods and woolen yarns."

How far can a trade association go in giving information to its competitors? What is trade collusion? Has a new era of trust prosecution begun?

Atty.-Gen. Mitchell is the law-enforcement officer of the United States government. The Sherman law is on the books to enforce. It may be good and it may be bad. But that is no concern of the Attorney-General. So business is finding out.

Scrap the Sherman antitrust laws and allow employers to exchange cost and price data!

Matthew Woll, first vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, so advised a textile convention as the best means of stabilizing the textile industry. Mr. Woll's contended that the restrictions imposed today by law are a relic of a business era long since gone, but that these restrictions penalize every social force "by the tremendous waste of unintelligent production."

"America has outlived the era of competitive philosophy," says this labor leader. "Limited manufacture and the subsequent rivalry for business are working to the detriment of all classes. The only way we can improve the situation is by allowing manufacturers in co-operation with their employees to adjust their output to consumer needs."

This labor leader believes that an increase in consuming power would result from a repeal of these laws, because employers would be able to stabilize their wage cost without the anarchistic, blind, cut-throat tactics used in present business conditions. Many of America's labor leaders today are taking this position with regard to Sherman antitrust legislation.

Dr. George W. Taylor, of the University of Pennsylvania, discussed the question from another angle in an address before the American Federation of Full Fashion Hosiery Workers.

"As long as we have a 30 per cent overproduction as we have had during the last year, we will have ruinous competition, wage difficulties, and trade depression," he said. "The only road to improvement lies in the co-operation of the manufacturers with intelligent labor agencies in controlling production by scientific research. And this research cannot come about while we are hampered by the restrictions of the Sherman Act."

Some years ago I was talking with O. P. Van Sweringen, the Cleveland railroad magnate, on the future trend in business. Repeatedly during that conversation he used the term "balanced competition."

Perhaps that is what business needs today above everything else.

Uncontrolled competition may some day be outlawed as a relic of barbarism—just as balanced competition in many cases seems outlawed today by the provisions of the Sherman antitrust laws.

SITUATION ON METAL MART TOLD

Usual Slowing Down of Business Reflected in Activity and Prices

NEW YORK, June 28. (AP)—The general slowing down of business usual during the summer combined with a continuance of unsettled conditions in the stock market, has been reflected by some easing in prices in the steel market during the last week. There also has been some further curtailment of production. The growing requirements of structural material and the heavy pipeline bookings remain an encouraging feature. Pig iron was unchanged with no improvement in the volume of business.

A fair day-to-day business for export continued in copper, but domestic fabricators, who are said to be covered well ahead, remained generally out of the market. An inquiry for 600 tons of wire was reported to be the only sizeable domestic business outstanding. After recent fluctuations, the market has held steady at 12 cents for electrolytic delivered in the Connecticut Valley.

Tin prices reacted from early week steadiness owing to the setback in London and reports some producers were not in sympathy with proposals to curtail operations.

A decline of $3 a ton in the price of lead failed to stimulate demand, but there was a little more inquiry with the market steady at the end of the week.

Zinc continued to work lower, being influenced by reports some producers intended to increase output notwithstanding large stocks and the present restricted demand.

Antimony was very dull with no important price changes reported.

Trio of Alcohol Units in Merger

CINCINNATI, June 28. (AP)—A combination of stock interests embracing total assets appraised at $21,000,000, a merger has been effected by three corporations engaged in the production of industrial alcohol, by-products and other chemicals, it was said today by Victor M. O'Shaughnessy, Lawrenceburg, Ind., who is to be president of the new corporation.

The merger includes the plants and properties of the General Industrial Alcohol Corporation, the Rossville Commercial Alcohol Corporation and the American Solvents and Chemical Company of New York. The company will be known as the American Solvents and Chemical Company, with headquarters in New York.

Saturday Sales Smallest in Nearly Two Years

Motor Accessory Issues Rise in Selling Drive

General Electric Leader in Slight Recovery

NEW YORK, June 28. (AP)—Interest in the stock market was at a low ebb today. Sales reached the smallest total for a two-hour session in nearly two years—only 890 shares.

With many traders out of town for the week-end, there was little to influence the course of prices. Selling of motor accessory shares, apparently based on a report of decreased operations in those lines and of a few rails brought out moderate declines, but the appearance of a demand for General Motors in the late dealings prevented a downward movement and the close was irregular. United States Steel, American Can, Radio, American Telephone and General Electric showed fractional advances.

Bearish activities of the first hour and a half were on a scale that seemed destined to establish a new low Saturday volume for the past four years. Sales to 11:30 totaled only 350,000 shares, so the entire movement of the last thirty minutes accounted for a large proportion of the day's business.

The strength in General Motors, which closed 1 3-4 higher, spread to Westinghouse, Bethlehem Steel, Vanadium, American Telephone and Light, up 1 to nearly 2 points. Timken Roller Bearing and Electric Auto Lite broke to new lows, the latter regaining part of its decline. Southern Railway was up in supply and was pushed to other new minimums.

Most of the railroad statements coming to hand today showed large declines in May operating income. The Tennessee steel district reported that United Steel would be able to maintain operations next week at 60 per cent of capacity because of an increase in pipe orders, but Bethlehem is reducing to 60 per cent of total capacity from 65 and Empire that will be idle. Otherwise, there was no news of financial importance.

Denny Appointed to Head Society of Underwriters

Roy Denny, representing the Missouri State Life Insurance Company, was elected president of the Underwriters' Association of Los Angeles at the annual meeting Tuesday night, last. He succeeds Fred Hathaway of the Home Life, who has been president for the last two years.

Sam McCurdy of the New York Life Insurance Company was elected vice-president of the association and J. F. Hackman of the Pacific National, treasurer. New directors elected were: Milt Blanchard, Connecticut General Life; A. F. Gilbertson, Equitable Life of New York; B. Stannard, Aetna; and Fred Hathaway. Directors remaining in office are: Harold Saul, John Hancock Mutual; Leslie R. Rounds, Penn Mutual of Iowa; J. M. Bloodworth, Home Life of Central; and Percy Maxfield, Phoenix Mutual.

Mr. Denny announced that he would recommend to the directors that the association change its meetings from dinners to luncheons.

Sierra Pacific Earnings Gain

NEW YORK, June 28.—Sierra Pacific Electric Company reported today net profits for twelve months ended May 31, of $1,494,000 after charges, as against $1,452,000 for the same period a year ago, an increase of $39,294.

Gross revenues for the same period declined from $4,000,000 for the year to $4,976,378, a decrease of $103. May net profits fell off approximately $5000 from the total for May, 1929, and amounted to $268,843 against $321,359 in that year, a decrease of $52,516.

SPERRY COMPANY CUTS FLOUR PRICE

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28.—Sperry Flour Company announced today a decrease of 20 cents a barrel on Drifted Snow flour, making the new price $6.80. The new rate is effective the 28th inst.

Stocks Move Fractionally Upward as Volume of Trading Lags Abruptly

Standard Oil of California was the center of attraction on the week's closing half-day session yesterday of the Los Angeles Stock Exchange while the balance of the market was traded in a desultory fashion. Transactions in the Standard Oil stock, however, were conducted at a rapid pace and from a low at 58½ the issue was swept up to 59¼ at the close for a net gain of ½.

Despite the listless trading activity in the balance of the market a brighter undertone prevailed as a total absence of selling operations supported the theory that liquidation has dried up. Practically all of the issues called in the dealings showed a fractional improvement at the end of the day, which largely corrected Friday's decline.

Union Oil of California spurted 3-4 to 39 5-8, a new high for the current move initiated last Wednesday, and Richfield and Rio Grande gained less amounts to 15 1-2 and 17, respectively. No other oils were traded.

Transamerica firmed up 1-2 to end at 30 and Security-First National Bank gained a similar amount to 102 1-2. California Bank rallied a full point to 106 and Pacific Mutual also advanced a point to 75 1-2 with the rights moving up 10 cents to 2.45. Pacific Finance held to 36 1-4, while International Re-Insurance dropped 1-2 to a new bottom at 37. Pacific American Fire held firm to 43 and Claude Neon to 30 1-2 was unchanged.

Western Air Express, an inactive issue, slumped 2 5-8 points to 29 3-8.

Sales totaled 5512 shares, valued at $279,789; previous day, 17,310 shares, valued at $649,554.

LOS ANGELES CURB

Few changes of consequence were recorded in the major list of the Los Angeles Curb Exchange yesterday as the volume of dealings dropped to an exceedingly low level. A number of advances, however, were scored in the penny group, which continued to trade at an active pace.

Bandini Petroleum featured the latter group. Under transactions of nearly 7000 shares the issue was swept up 1.20 to a new high for the year at 4.30. A week ago the issue sold as low as 2.30. Other gains in the penny list were made by Kinner, Mascot, Mt. Diablo, Occidental, Pacific-Southwest Discount and United American.

Consolidated Steel, Fokker Aircraft, Hancock Oil and Intercoast showed a small improvement in the major list.

Sales totaled 24,920 shares, valued at $80,356; previous day, 18,865 shares, valued at $48,168.

CRUDE OIL CONDITION BETTER, SAYS REESER

NEW YORK, June 28.—With production running 300,000 barrels daily behind this time a year ago while consumption and exports are about 100,000 barrels greater, the crude oil situation is in an unusually sound position, E. B. Reeser, president of the American Petroleum Institute, announced today. Mr. Reeser sees no indications of a declining price structure in the Mid-Continent fields.

DIRECTOR ELECTED

NEW YORK, June 28.—W. E. MacGregor of Boston, a vice-president of Harris, Forbes & Co., director of Harris, Forbes Trust Company of Boston and National Shawmut Bank of Boston, was elected a director and member of the finance committee of Associated Gas and Electric Company today.

BUSINESS TREND IN MAY LOWER

earnings were registered for the full month of April. A year ago, million-a-week car loadings started in mid-April and were maintained, except in holiday weeks, until early November. This year, however, the million-a-week signal is yet to be hung up. Reflection of the fact that loadings for the year to date are the smallest since 1924 is had in reports that reductions in forces or in hours of labor are contemplated by several systems.

Because of the conceded importance of the world-wide deflation of prices that has been going on in part for more than a full year past, it might be worth noting that the June 1 index number showed the eighth consecutive monthly decline. It is also noteworthy that prices are now 13.4 per cent below those of a year ago and the lowest since the summer of 1921, when the after results of post-war deflation were visible, and with this exception at the lowest point since December, 1915.

COMMODITIES SAG

Compared with a year ago, 70 out of 106 commodities are lower in price. During May and early June three commodities, sugar, rubber and silver, were at the lowest point ever reached, and raw silk was certainly at the lowest in many years.

Employment conditions are still anxiously discussed in this country. The April returns of employment in manufacturing, made up by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, show 10 per cent reduction from a year ago and the lowest level back to 1924. Pay rolls are 14 per cent off.

According to manufacturers' reports, employment conditions in the largest center of automobile manufacture are the poorest in five years. As to this, it may be said that April automobile output was the largest in number of units for eight months but was 30 per cent below that of a year ago.

Chain stores, fifty-four reporting in May, showed a gain of 2.8 per cent over the like period of 1929, this comparing with a gain of 11.4 per cent in April and a decrease of 1.9 per cent in March. For five months, these chains show a gain of 4.3 per cent. This follows a gain of 23 per cent by all chains a year ago, over the like period of 1928.

DECLINE SMALL

Department-store sales, backed by intensive advertising, show a decline of 1 per cent in May as against a gain of 11 per cent in April. The decrease for five months is 3 per cent.

Reports to Bradstreet's from 2000 leading cities of the United States show a total value of house, office and store building permitted for in May this year of $167,827,265, as against $171,551,223 at the identical cities for April, and $252,340,753 for May, 1929. There is here indicated a decrease of 21 per cent from April and of 33.4 per cent from May, last year.

A winter wheat crop of 532,000,000 bushels is indicated by the June 1 figures, a decrease of 8 per cent from the 578,000,000 bushels gathered last year, and 3 per cent below the five-year average of 551,000,000 bushels. Trade estimates are slightly above the government estimate.

OIL NEWS

BY HOWARD KEGLEY

Extension of the Seacliff field can be developed if the Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Company's Bell No. A-2, two miles southeast of Seacliff, can be made to produce oil from a depth of 7479 feet.

The Chanslor-Canfield's project yesterday proceeded in bailing down to oil and now is running a test preparatory to start swabbing for showings of gas and oil more frequent since this drep was started about 200 feet of oil sand. This lends strength to belief that the bit stopped short corresponding to the Lloyd sand in the Ventura-avenue field. Should the light gas pressure, which that Hobson No. A-2 encountered, prove to exist for four or five days, a flow of oil is started.

Drills Another

Activity in the southeasterly portion of the Signal Hill field continues with excellent producers, as follows: By the completion of the McKeon's No. 7, which is flowing at the rate of 2000 barrels of oil a day from a depth of 5600 feet. This project, like the Southern Securities Company's Bell No. 1 which came in during the past week for 1800 barrels of oil a day, is one of half a dozen new completions at Signal Hill which have boosted the daily production a little above the allowable.

Activity in the southeasterly portion of the Signal Hill developed one new feature during the past week, as shown by the Magna Corporation, which seeks a permit to drill what is thought to be the first drilling site in the field. The operator has made application for a triangular piece of land that measures thirty feet on each forty-one feet on another forty-five feet along the other, leaving the operator just space for a grade location for derrick and a battery of boilers. The location is due north of the Southern Securities' Painted Hills lease and within a short distance of the Signal Oil and Gas Company's Goodyear No. 1 now making 400 feet.

Drills Vaqueros

The Ring Oil Company's More No. 1 near Goleta is making progress and the drill in this Temblor well is thought to be within a few feet of the Vaqueros formation, presumably penetrated by the Standard Petroleum Corporation's Bell No. 1, a tideland permit, to the west.

Another project is drilling below 5000 feet, while General's Crandall No. 1 continues to encounter a gas sand below 6600 feet. This underlies what the Vaqueros at 6000 feet, a little lower on the structure than General's More No. 1 and No. 3 on the mainland.

Starts Deepening

Work is starting to deepen the Superior Oil Company's No. 63 at Torrance in the hope to encounter showings of oil. This project is the first deep test for that field and will be watched with interest by those who have long obtained gas from the shallower sand. Another deep test is drilling below 10,000 feet in Huntington Beach field, where Jones No. 1, an old project in the shallow sand, is rigging up for some drilling as a deep test. Another area the Barnsdall Oil Company's Bernhard No. 1 is drilling below 6000 feet with showings of gas formation.

Sale Reported

Another sale has been encountered in the Richfield Oil Company's Uni-Consolidated No. 1 at Point Having gone through sand shale with a strong show of gas from 2934 feet, reports this wildcat on what is to be a probable northerly line are being watched closely as showings have been picked up at higher than in the Standard Company's Gerber No. 1, failing to develop production at 4600 feet, has resumed operations to deepen.

Continues Active

The St. Patracia Oil Company has moved on to Lot No. 11, Block 3 on Tract No. 146 in the town-lot area at Potrero and is preparing to put up derrick to drill near the Sunset Pacific Oil Company's Globe No. 1, one of the best producers there.

St. Patracia abandoned Connolley No. 1, one mile southeast of the Potrero town-lot area, several months ago, having gone to 9005 feet without obtaining showings that justified further drilling.

The Potrero town-lot area now has more than a score of drilling projects.

Richfield Oil Company's Coffin No. 1, a deep test, has penetrated more than 100 feet of oil sand and shale. The drill now is making progress below 6130 feet. The company's Sloan No. 1 is below 4856 feet. Its Hassen No. 1 is off production.

The Sunset Pacific Oil Company is pulling tubing from Globe No. 1 near the intersection of Queen and Prairie avenues and will endeavor to restore it to steady production. Bottom of the hole is at 5676 feet. The company's Gaucho No. 1 is drilling below 5681 feet, while its Inglewood-Community No. 2 is flowing 130 barrels of high-gravity oil a day and No. 3 is yielding about 440 barrels daily.

Brings One In

The Union Oil Company yesterday placed on production Bell No. 41 at Santa Fe Springs for 1000 barrels of 33.5-deg. gravity oil a day from a depth of 6865 feet. The flow is clean. Union's Bell No. 56 is swabbing with bottom at 4500 feet, its Alexander No. 12 and No. 23 are also nearing completion and Union's Parwell No. 19 is preparing to make a water shut-off test. Only three other Union projects now are drilling at Santa Fe Springs.

Wheat Futures Point Down on Bearish News

CHICAGO, June 28. (AP)—Quick right-about-face action of wheat prices today gave an exhibition of what a weather market can do. Starting with an advance in quotations, the market suddenly underwent a downward slide of 3c a bushel from the top figure reached, mainly because of rain relief in Canadian prairie provinces.

Accelerating the tumble of wheat values were reports of increasing movement of newly harvested domestic winter wheat, together with predictions from authoritative sources that United States spring wheat this season would mature fast enough to beat black rust, the outcome in this case also being purely a question of weather.

Closing quotations on wheat were heavy at the day's bottom level, 1¼@1⅝c a bushel under Saturday's finish, and closed ¾@1⅛c off. Gain in corn and provisions varying from 2c decline to a rise of 1c.

Except for dispatches indicating wheat in every one of the prairie provinces had again been smashed by rains from possible disaster, most of the day's market developments were of a kind that ordinarily would mean higher prices. Liverpool quotations showed an upward slant. Word came from Kansas City despite progress of the harvest in the state, the stock of old wheat on hand in Kansas City showed a 1,500,000 bushel shrinkage in the last week. Of the increase reported during the same week this season.

Another factor which usually would tend to lift prices was fear here of South Dakota black rust where wheat is only in the blossom stage.

Reports flooding in, however, showing Canadian rains were persistent, appeared to put everything else in the background. Ideas of an end to deliveries of wheat in Chicago, the prior of December wheat contracts closed stubbornly to the old-time standard of $1, a number of shorts covering. Wheat now being harvested in the Southwest and West, was down practically 5c a bushel lower.

Corn and oats lagged as a result of wheat weakness, despite cash premiums for the newest prices of the season.

Provisions were irregular, lard easing slightly, but meats stiffening up, although trade was meager.

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, June 28. (AP)—Trading in cotton was quiet today, with business attributed largely to evening-up over the week-end. July sold up to 13.80 and the new October contract 13.06, or about 7 to 11 points net higher.

The close was steady within a point or two of the best at net advances of 6 to 9 points.

CATTLE—Receipts only a few hundred heavier were featured by the inclusion of several loads of good grain fed cattle from Idaho, Wyoming and Colorado. However, the majority of offerings were half-fat and low grade Californias with a few loads of Arizonas. Trade has been very slow, practically at a standstill on Thursday and Friday with around 1000 head in first hands. The finished killing stock has not suffered greatly, the decline being around 25c, but the common to medium half-fat stock is unevenly lower, bulk showing 50@75c decline with quite a few sales as much as 1.00 off. Demand for cows is not so normal and no assistance is available from this outlet, killers state that this market is still comparatively high as compared with eastern markets and with the oversupply of undesirable killing stock, prices will have to drop still further.

Eight loads of 932 to 941-pound fed Wyoming steers brought 10.00@10.25, with three loads of 1227-pound Idaho at 11.35. Four loads of 1180-pound grass and cake California made 10.00@10.25, with top weights at 10.65. Several loads of 1030 to 1140-pound grass steers early in the week brought 10.00@10.50, with bulk of late sales going at 9.00@9.50, paid for 974 to 1105-pound weights. Low grades were steady to 50c@1.00 lower, with some Three loads of 567 to 587-pound Arizona Mexican type steers made 6.00@6.50, with straight Mexicans down to 5.00. Two loads of feeders turned at 8.75.

Two loads of 630-pound fed Colorado heifers scored 11.50. Only odd lots of grass heifers made 8.00@9.00 with bulk at 7.00@8.00, and common kinds at 5.00@6.00 below. Californian cows turned at 7.50@8.25, with top medium cows at 7.50@7.75. Bulk of common to medium cows made 5.75@7.50, with low cutters and cutters at 5.00@5.50. A few good bulls brought 6.75@7.00, with most medium kinds at 5.00@6.50.

CALVES—Receipts were lighter but calves and vealers shared the 50@75c decline. Very few selected kinds sold at 9.00@9.50, with top to 10.00, but quotable closing top steers at 12.50. Bulk of medium to good vealers and light calves at 8.00@9.00, with cull and common at 6.75@8.50.

HOGS—With receipts practically the same as a week ago, hogs suffered the full decline in sympathy with sharp eastern downturns. A load of 171-pound commercial barrows and gilts brought 10.00, top for the week at 11.10 with practical top on the close at 10.85. Bulk of 160 to 200-pound weights made 10.50@10.85 with one load late at 10.75, and some 140 to 220 pounds at 9.00@10.00. Sows sold largely at 8.00@8.50, with bulk at 8.25@8.50. A deck of short-shorn Island yearlings made 8.00 with yearlings northern at 6.75, and good to choice lights at 8.50@9.00. A deck of 130-pound breeder ewes brought 4.00 with saw lambs out at 2.00 @3.00. Medium to choice Elder ewes are quoted at 3.00@4.00.

Suit Charges Terms of Oil Lease Not Met

BAKERSFIELD, June 28.—A $50,000 suit has been filed in the Superior Court here by the Bank of America, against E. G. Lewis and E. A. Lynch, trustee for the estate of E. G. Lewis, and other defendants.

The bank is acting as guardian of the estates of Patrick O'Brien, John O'Brien and other plaintiffs and charges that failure of the defendants to drill and complete wells under the terms of a lease, and the failure to produce oil and royalties have done the plaintiffs damage to the amount asked. The land involved is in Sec. 6, 11-23, being part of the Federal land district.

Dog Catcher's Pup Won't Quit

COUNCIL BLUFFS (Iowa) June 28. (AP)—Pug, the dog catcher's dog in Council Bluffs, refuses to quit his job despite a change in the town's political regime.

For years Pug's master was the dog catcher, and Pug rode with him every day.

But there came a day when Pug's boss lost his job through the shifts of municipal politics. He went back to barbering and arranged a bed for Pug to pass his days of retirement.

Pug, however, had the crusading spirit. He insisted on going with the new dog catcher, who didn't want him. Finally Pug triumphed, and so he sits again on the dog catcher's wagon, refusing to be moved.

VISALIA, June 28.—Certificates of promotion from grammar schools to high schools of Tulare county issued this year from the office of J. E. Buckman, county superintendent, numbered 11,200. This is a slight increase over last year. Until two years ago the number of such promotions never exceeded 10,000.

STATE TO PICK EDISON YOUTH

Board of Education to Name Contestant July 10

Californian Will Be Guest of Electrical Wizard

National Contest Set For Late Next Month

SACRAMENTO, June 28. (AP)—A California youth to represent the State in a national contest being conducted by Thomas A. Edison to select youths to carry on his scientific work will be named by the State Board of Education July 10 at a meeting in San Francisco. The winner will go to Edison's laboratories at West Orange, N. J., with boys from other States to take final examinations and join in a round of entertainment.

The State winners will be Edison's guests from July 29 to August 2, and in addition to taking examinations, they will visit New York, have luncheon aboard the liner Leviathan, go to Coney Island, meet Mayor James Walker, and attend various entertainments in their honor.

District elimination contests have been conducted in California, reducing the field to four contestants, and their alternates.

In San Francisco, Stanley Johnson, 17-year-old graduate of Polytechnic High School, was selected, with Noel Porter, 17, Lowell High School graduate, as alternate.

Sam Alderson, 1930 honor graduate of Sacramento High School, was chosen as the best candidate in the northern part of the State. His alternate is James Reavis, Napa.

Leonard Schaub, 18 years of age, Visalia, won honors in the Central California competition. Herbert M. Arnold, Lemon Cove, is alternate.

From twenty-six Southern California aspirants, Henry John Bruman, Los Angeles, was selected, with Glenn W. Weaver, Compton, as alternate.

In selecting the youths, their school records were considered, together with reports of independent scientific research undertaken and completed.

Slough Dam Row Results in Court Battle

BAKERSFIELD, June 28.—Antonio S. Munis and Laura Mun's are suing W. L. Bullock, M. E. Johnson and others before Superior Judge E. F. Brittan, asking for a permanent injunction to prevent the defendants from interfering with the flow of drainage water from Kern River, which goes through a slough and has gone through the slough from time immemoral, according to the complaint.

The slough, according to the complaint, is forty feet wide and is a natural drainage system. The land involved is in Sec. 17, 21-28.

The plaintiffs assert that on the 4th inst. the defendants built a dam across the slough, stopping the irrigation overflow from the plaintiff's land. Learning of this, the plaintiffs demolished the dam, whereupon the defendants built another dam, this time on their own property, according to the complaint.

Through immemorial use of the slough the plaintiffs contend that they have acquired an easement over the defendants' land for the drainage of water from their property. A continuance of this drainage is necessary, they assert, if they are to continue farming their land.

Kern Acts to Save Money on Needy Guests

BAKERSFIELD, June 28.—As the result of large sums spent by Kern county and other similarly situated counties on transient indigents who should have received necessary care in their home districts, an agreement between California counties regarding residence and transfer of families receiving public assistance has been reached, Mrs. Anna L. Saylor, director of the State Department of Social Welfare, announced today.

Last year, Mrs. Saylor said, Kern county spent $79,963 in caring for indigents outside of the old folks' home, the County Hospital and other institutions, and a large percentage of this was on transients.

DOUBTS ON NEW PLANET AT END

Definitely Listed With Heavenly Bodies

Wilson Scientists Trace Record Over Years

Photographs of Decade Ago Disclose Dim Presence

BY RANSOME SUTTON

The new ninth planet is a regular planet after all. It has been named Pluto, after the mythological god of the infernal regions, brother of Saturn and brother of Jupiter and Neptune. At first sight, some astronomers suspected it might be a tailless comet, an asteroid, or something else, on its unplanetary behavior seemed to preclude the possibility of being one of the major members of the sun's family.

But the eccentricity and tilt of orbit made astronomers and mathematicians everywhere shake their heads. Like the black sheep of a famous family, however, Pluto's position in the solar family has been finally established by some of the very astronomers who questioned its character.

RECORD TRACED

In tracing up its record, Mt. Wilson students found dim dots on their photographs, taken during the month of December ten years ago by Milton Humason, and figured out that these dots were made by Pluto. It was like looking for a particular grain of sand on the seashore but keen eyes and magnifying glasses succeeded in identifying the same dim dots on the four old photographic plates.

The planet, whose reflected light made the dots, was not then in the part of the sky where it is now. It has been traveling away from our region since the December of 1919, when the pictures were taken. And that fact gives a very definite clew to the distance and relationships of this new planet, for, when a movement is definitely located in different positions ten years apart, it is enough for those who know how to compute its orbit. The astronomers made the computation, and found its eccentricity 247. Instead of revolving in a circle, or near-circle, it moves around the sun on a great ellipse which has been flattened to

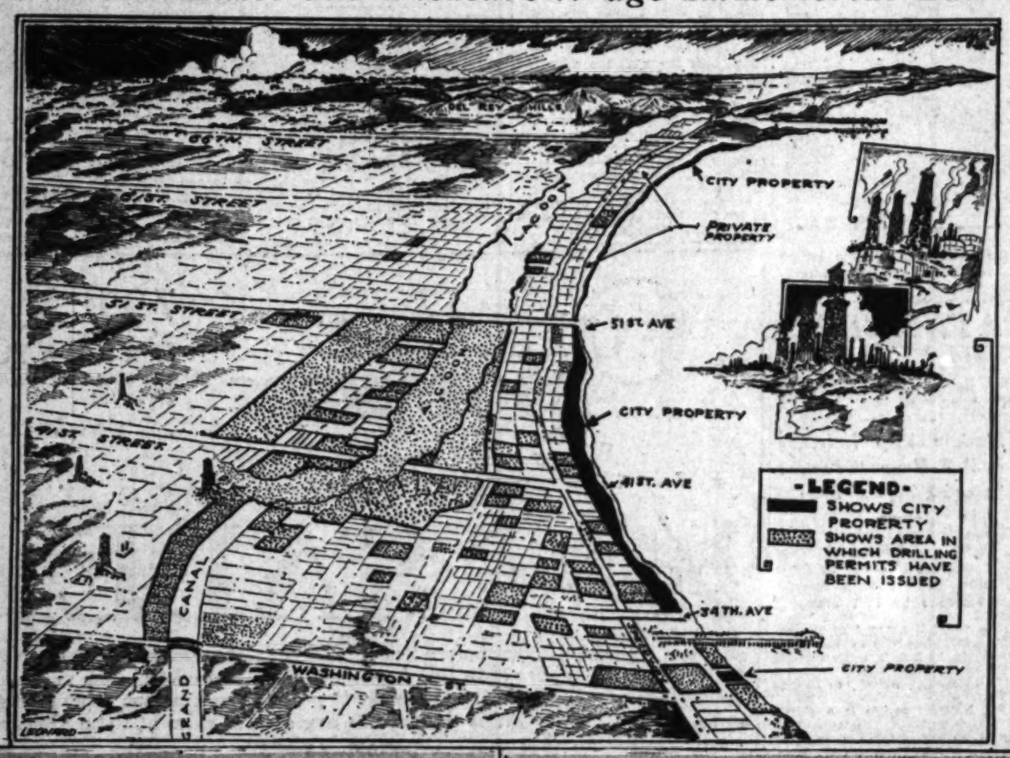
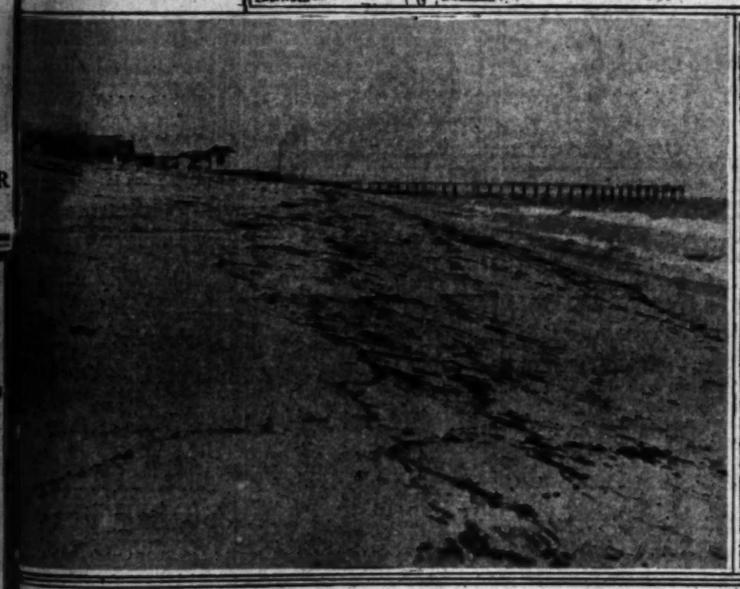
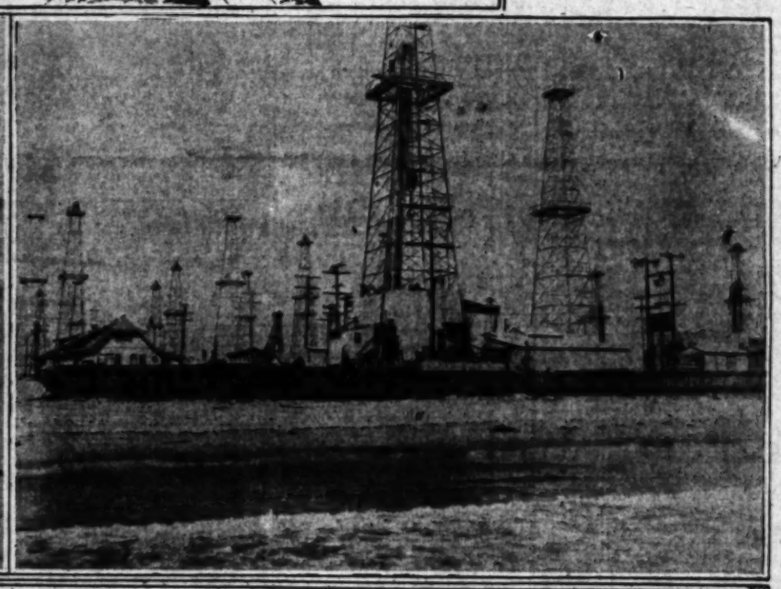
Where Business and Pleasure Wage Immemorial Battle







Wells or Welfare Question Before Venice Residents

Discovery of oil just back of Venice last December has set an oil industry marching into and capturing the recreational and bathing beach of Venice between Washington street and Playa del Rey, or Sixty-sixth avenue. So far the march has been on private property owners' lots. Now it is proposed that the city, whose Recreation and Playground Department has a beach strip up to 100 feet in width along the coast, lease the area 300 feet offshore between the two boundaries for oil development. A hot controversy over the proposal rages. Times Artist Leonard in this pictural map shows the territory under invasion. The dotted areas are where drilling already has been done or is arranged for. The black area is city-owned beach from which various oil interests would have the city permit them to build piers into the ocean and drill for oil—the city to receive royalties. Below, left, southern end of Venice beach at Sixty-sixth avenue, where Playa del Rey begins. It is open beach front. Here the city owns a beach strip about forty feet width between mean high tide and private property. Right—Forest of derricks in what less than six months ago was purely a recreational and bathing beach area.

VENICE BATTLE ATTESTS OIL AND WATER DO MIX

Facts in Beach Area Discovery Set Impartially Before Readers by "Times" Investigator

Shall Los Angeles lease for oil development that part of the ocean 300 feet offshore, paralleling its narrow mile and three-quarters Venice beach strip between Washington street and Playa del Rey?

When a company discovered oil in the country just back of Venice last December it started something. And that something is a great deal more complicated than the oil business which, as everybody knows, is complicated enough.

Great public problems of far-reaching influence upon the general welfare arose and demanded solution by persons of varying capacities and inclinations. "Big business," individual citizens, community workers and public officals found themselves confronted with more than a looming oil field.

They found a great conflict of interests because an excitable industry of possibly great and possibly small import was rearing itself in one of Los Angeles area's greatest recreation territories. Each set about meeting his sector of the advance in manner as varied as their interests are legion.

No solution is offered here. The facts alone are set up so one may find out something of what it is all about and then, if so inclined, to act in accord with one's own qualifications and tendencies to get expert information on particular phases.

The Venice oil boom had its inception last December when the Ohio Oil Company struck oil on the Recreation Gun Club property. It was in wide-open county territory just back of old Venice, about a quarter or half a mile inland from where Thirty-seventh avenue meets the sea. It appears that the underground oil pool extends seaward and to the south.

Venice property owners who long had been paying taxes and assessments on more or less unremunerative property were fired with hope of obtaining fortunes from the "black gold" beneath their lots. They begged the City Planning Commission to recommend and the City Council to permit them to drill for oil. The city officials did a lot of talking about maintaining some sort of order in the drilling here and there, but finally began granting drilling permits somewhat indiscriminately and the bars were down.

Today oil derricks stand like trees in a forest between the original strike and the water front. Steam piledrivers roar on many a vacant lot preparing foundations for other derricks. One hundred and eighty permits to drill for oil have been given and twenty-five more are in procedure. More probably are on file by this time. At least twenty-two oil companies have leased lots from property owners in the field. At Thirty-sixth Place one may stand on the seawall and count twenty-seven derricks from the waterline back a little distance and closely on either side and then not get them all because of view obstructions.

From Washington street (Thirty-first avenue formerly) the Venice beach extends southward to Playa del Rey or to Sixty-sixth avenue. Permits to drill already have been granted to owners of water-front lots as far south as Sixtieth avenue. Some of the lots extend to the waterline. Others are separated from the waterline by a city beach strip which varies in width from all but nothing to about 100 feet.

If the fever continues, as it gives

No one can fail to see the significance and importance of what is happening. These eager young artists are bringing to the Otis Art Institute classes race memories of old cultures and age-old arts. From this melting pot will come a new and great American art and culture.

ORANGES; BOYISH FIGURES

We have survived another industrial crisis.

Young ladies now bulge; but the prices of oranges stand; in the fall of food prices on the New York market yesterday oranges not only held their own, but went up.

KEEPING SLIM

Somewhere in the orange belt there ought to be a statue draped with garlands and adorned with honors; and the statue should be of a flapper with legs much in evidence and a flat, boyish figure.

It was the boyish figures that brought oranges and grapefruit to the breakfast tables of America and won the long battle to place oranges among the necessary daily foods instead of being ornaments for Christmas stockings.

SEA TO YIELD TREASURE?

Experimenters Announce Discovery of Process for Extracting at Profit Gold from Ocean

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

SANTA MONICA, June 28.—"All is not gold that glitters" but experiments completed today at a seaside laboratory installed in a cabin on the Roosevelt Highway at Las Flores beach have convinced Herschel C. Parker, consulting and mining engineer of international repute, and his partner, Konrad Kather of Berlin, that the glitter waters of the ocean hold gold in paying quantities. The fact that there are minute quantities of gold in sea water has long been known but no process for making it pay the cost of recovery has before proved practicable.

Prior to moving their equipment today to parts unknown they were preparing to ship to the Smithsonian Institution and the United States Mint five grains of gold which they report was extracted from the Pacific's saltiest brine. This shipment is for scientific record only, Mr. Parker stated, but it may develop into future shipments to the mint and other markets of gold hitherto untouched because the sea has held to it tenaciously; in the face of experiments conducted in this country and abroad.

PROFIT ASSERTED

Herschel C. Parker, Fellow of the Royal Society, ex-president and one of the founders of the Explorers' Club of New York, who has scaled Mt. McKinley and explored many of the earth's least known wilds, said today the experimental work in the Las Flores plant has shown that the new process can earn better than 75 per cent gross profit extracting gold on a basis of 2 cents value from between five and ten tons of sea water.

Some of the tests have shown as low as 1 cent but the average is nearer 2 cents, it is said. He and his associates now are planning to start a plant on a commercial basis. His partner, Mr. Kather, a mining man of long experience, described the process briefly as follows:

"In our process, which is protected by patents, we pipe sea water into a tank. In the bottom of this tank iron ochre—oxide of iron—has

LIBRARIANS' CONVENTION CONCLUDED

Medal Given to Authoress; Adam Strohm Selected as Association's President

Chief interest in the final session of the fifty-second annual conference of the American Library Association centered in the Sala de Oro at the Biltmore yesterday afternoon when more than 2000 delegates and librarians gathered to witness the presentation of the Newberry medal for the most distinguished children's book of the year to Miss Rachel Field of New York City.

ADAM STROHM

The award was made by Miss Effie L. Power of the Cleveland Public Library and chairman of the section for library work with children of the association, who told Miss Field that her book was chosen ahead of others from a large and noteworthy output because it is ageless and will endure as long as there is youth in the hearts of readers. There is no true test of its sincerity and beauty, she said, than the fact that children have accepted it.

The book, "Hitty, Her First Hundred Years," Miss Power explained, is the first prize book to receive two awards within a year. It was

TENTH STREET PLANS MOVE

Through-Boulevard Project Nearer Realization With Latest Action by City Officials

The goal of the large number of property owners who have been working for eight years to have Tenth street made into a 100-foot boulevard stretching across the city came nearer to realization during the past week as the result of two steps taken by city officials.

City Engineer Jessup, in a communication to the City Council, informed that body he has been unofficially advised that an interlocutory judgment in the condemnation proceedings to acquire the land necessary for opening and widening Tenth street, between Indiana street and a point 124.23 feet west of Lucerne Boulevard, will be entered within ninety days.

ACTION REQUESTED

In order to be able to proceed with the paving and other physical improvement of the widened thoroughfare as soon as the opening-and-widening proceedings are completed, the Engineer added to his letter a request that the Council instruct him at once to prepare the necessary plans and ordinances for the improvement of Tenth street between Indiana street and Rimpau Boulevard. Improvement proceedings for Tenth street west from Rimpau Boulevard to Robertson Boulevard already are under way.

The Engineer also reminded the Council that tentative plans for the improvement provide for a ten-inch pavement, cement curbs, sidewalks, concrete gutters and all necessary underground structures. The existing pavement is to be retained wherever possible and the new pavement is to be of asphaltic concrete. The roadway is to be seventy feet wide between San Pedro and Hoover streets and seventy-four feet wide on the rest of the thoroughfare.

The communication was referred to the Council's Public Works Committee, which may act on it at its next meeting Tuesday.

PROTESTS DENIED

In the meantime proceedings for the paving of Tenth street, or Olympic Boulevard, between Rimpau Boulevard and Robertson Boulevard are nearing completion, as the result of the action of the Council in unanimously denying the protests against the ordinance of intention. This improvement is included in the Olympic Boulevard and Stanley-avenue Improvement District.

During the past week the final ordinance for the improvement has been prepared and yesterday it reached the clerk of the Council. In the ordinary course of events it should be voted upon next Wednesday. If it is passed then and approved by the Mayor, the Board of Public Works may advertise immediately for bids.

Members of the Tenth-street Association, which was formed to push the boulevard project, are anxious for immediate action.

SAFETY GLASS URGED

Passage of an ordinance specifying that all public conveyances carrying passengers for hire be equipped with safety glass is urged in a communication received by the City Council. The letter was sent by the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company.

been placed in certain quantity; the ochre stays in flotation at the bottom. This ochre, which is mined in large quantities, will break up chemical forces in the sea water and attract the gold to itself. This ochre is common and paint is made from it.

"When the ochre is rich enough in captured gold we put it through an ordinary chlorination or cyanide process to extract the gold. Then we reclaim our chemicals and repeat the process. An agitator at the bottom of the tank keeps the water constantly feeding gold to the ochre.

LONG UNATTAINABLE

"Since the earliest mining days prospectors often have stood gazing yearningly at the sea," Mr. Parker said. "It has been known for ages that minute quantities of valuable metals exist in great masses of primary eruptive rock. In quartz these metals settle in seams or veins and, therefore, the prospector has long sought quartz. Only a small fraction of the metal, however, has ever been reclaimed from all possible sources.

"The '49ers panned the river sands, taking advantage of erosion and natural forces which washed the gold particles down to the bottom drainage. These old-timers all knew that vast wealth in fine yellow metal must be washing annually into the sea, to be spread by ocean currents over unmapped subsea domains.

MINING WATER

"Our process does not touch the sea sands but the sea itself—the gold held imprisoned in the water. And we believe we have reached a point where we can expand and go after sea gold on a larger scale."

And so the old Forty-Niner saying, "Thar's gold in them thar hills," may be changed to a modern scientific version, "There's gold in that ocean!" It may become the future cry of prospectors whose packs are on automobiles, airplanes and steel ships instead of the patient, long-eared burro of '49.

PLANT VISIONED

One of the possibilities in constructing a large plant, Mr. Kather pointed out, includes a breakwater project in which tide water would be fed through gates into a harbor. With the lowering of the tide the gates would be closed. Then this harbor would be mined for gold just as the experimental tank has been mined.

The ochre would be strewn on the bottom and agitated by mechanism suspended from a boat. When all the water in the harbor was robbed of its gold a fresh supply would be available by utilizing the tide gates for drainage and replenishment.

Mrs. De Silva's Funeral Rites to be Tomorrow

Funeral services will be conducted tomorrow at 10:30 a.m. at St. Vibiana's Cathedral for Mrs. Georgetta Gard De Silva, member of a pioneer Southern California family, who died Thursday night at her home at Azusa. Interment will be in Mt. Calvary Cemetery.

Mrs. De Silva, who was 51 years of age, was the mother of George Gard (Buddy) De Silva, song writer and a member of the music publishing house of De Silva, Brown & Henderson. Her son is now in Los Angeles, where he has been doing work for motion-picture companies.

She was the daughter of the late Maj. George E. Gard, former United States marshal in Southern California, and also a niece of former Sheriff William A. Hammel of Los Angeles county.

Pallbearers will be Brant Gard, Ray Henderson, Lew Brown, Gerald Staley, Leo McCarey and David Butler.

AIR CIRCUS PUT ON FOR BOY SCOUTS

Noted Flyers Perform at Municipal Airport for Benefit of Youths

An air circus was held at the Municipal Airport at Mines Field yesterday and more than 3000 persons witnessed stunts performed. The circus was arranged especially for Boy Scouts by aviation post of the American Legion in co-operation with Maj. Richard Barnitz, director of the airport.

Col. Art Goebel, Col. Roscoe Turner, Lieut. E. B. Kroger, commanding officer of the Southern California Naval Reserve Aviation Corps; Lieuts. D. E. McDonald and Arthur Hastings and Capt. D. B. Ogden instructed the Scouts in stunts and feats of the air.

According to Maj. Barnitz an effort will be made to have the Army, Navy and National Guard co-ordinate in a plan for an air and military circus each month at the airport.

"Flyers of national reputation will be enlisted in the effort to interest the youth of Southern California in aviation," asserted Maj. Barnitz. "The Municipal Airport is always open to experiments and efforts on the part of the youngsters."

PATHFINDING TOUR STORY IN MAGAZINE

Mexican Trip Narrative by P. T. Hanna to Feature "Touring Topics" Issue

The forthcoming number of Touring Topics, the official magazine of the Automobile Club of Southern California, will contain a remarkable narrative by Phil Townsend Hanna.

It is the full account of the recent pathfinding trip by the club's expedition to map a route for the highway which eventually is to run from Fairbanks, Alaska, to Buenos Aires.

Mr. Hanna's article is a classic of travel writing. It tingles with drama, humor and facts—from the account of a trip through the heart of the bandit country with loaded guns and all automobile lights out; to the story of how a forlorn little Mexican waif won over the expedition party.

It gives the most complete and accurate account of an unknown section—off the railroad lines—that ever has been written. Every detail of every day's travel is there, told graphically, charmingly and vividly. The account runs about 20,000 words, and the issue of the magazine is practically given over to this narrative of a journey.

CROSS-QUIZ OF BERMAN LAUNCHED

Defense Seeks Motive for Aiding in Arrest of Lavine and Miss Johnson

Jacob Berman, "bright boy" of the Julian Petroleum Corporation ortah investigation, spent the entire morning yesterday on the witness stand in Superior Judge Schauer's court, where Morris Lavine, newspaper man, and Leontine Johnson are on trial charged with extorting $75,000 from Charles H. Crawford, politician.

Berman testified under direct examination earlier in the trial and yesterday he was cross-examined by Defense Attorneys William Beirne, Richard Cantillon and William T. Kendrick, Jr.

When court adjourned at noon the attorneys were still questioning Berman concerning his connection with the Julian Petroleum Corporation, attempting to disclose a motive for Berman's part in bringing about the arrest of the two defendants.

French Veteran Federation Fete Set for Today

On the fourteenth anniversary of the attack on Fort Douaumont, French military stronghold that blocked the German attack on Verdun in the World War, the Federation of French Veterans of the World War will have a picnic today at Whiting Woods Park.

Maurice Chevalier, star of the screen, who was a member of the forces defending the fort and was taken prisoner by the Germans, will attend the picnic and assist in the entertainment. So, too, will Dorothy Jardon, prima donna formerly with the Chicago Grand Opera Company.

The picnickers are to gather at the park at 10 a.m. There will be dancing and refreshments, the outing lasting until midnight.

Complainant Gets Her Man

Pedestrians at Second street and Broadway were startled yesterday afternoon when a woman suddenly seized a man, who broke away. Mrs. Elizabeth Flake, City Mother, with Officer C. F. Thomas of the Juvenile Bureau gave chase, capturing the fleeing man.

Mrs. Kate Glass, proprietor of a rooming-house at 542 North Cummings street, stated she had attempted to detain Herbert Freed, 25 years of age, for whose arrest she had signed a complaint for issuing checks without funds. Freed was booked at Central Station.

DIED FOR A STUNT

A year or so ago there was a Spanish bullfighter called Gallito. His stunt was to throw out his hands and give a Charley Chaplin shrug of his shoulders and a little grimace as he stood in front of the bull at the final moment—just before he sank the espada between the animal's shoulders.

On his last day the bull was too full of fight to give him time for the shrug. But rather than disappoint the yelling crowd he shrugged anyhow—and died with a bull's horn through his chest. His last grimace was through blood that welled up from his dying heart.

THE LESSER AFFLICTION

I suppose the reason that passenger busses are now equipped with radios is so the passengers will be resigned to death in case of a fatal accident.

THE DUMB GANGSTER

Edward Balmer's analysis of the gang crimes in Chicago indicates that large American cities have returned to a condition very much like the era of the robber barons during the Middle Ages.

Gangs may owe their existence to the Eighteenth Amendment, as alleged. But if it were not prohibition it would be something else.

Fundamentally, the cause of crime is that modern competition and industry are hooked up to a schedule too fast for dull brains. The gangster is invariably below zero mentally. Without mental resources he has no pleasures except those of a purely material plane, and he hasn't brains enough to make money enough to buy these pleasures. Just so, his love of adventure cannot be supplied mentally; it has to be a downright physical experience; and we no longer have a border infested with wild Indians to give his dumb soul an outlet.

BUILDINGS IN CITY TO BE FILM SUBJECTS

Downtown Los Angeles buildings are to become famed in motion pictures. James Haworth Longshore of Chicago, a guest of the Hayward Hotel, is so impressed by the beauty of many Los Angeles structures that he intends to make films of them to be shown to conventions of building owners and managers in different parts of the country.

ALL-NATIONS WEEK MADE BOWL PLAN

Concerts for Benefit of Foreign-Born Announced for Summer Season

Plans for an International Week at the Hollywood Bowl with Los Angeles' large foreign population attending on special nights were announced yesterday through Glenn M. Tindall, business manager.

The occasion will be during the second week of the summer concert season, which starts July 8, next. The nights of July 15, 17, 18 and 19 will be given over to various nations. Citizens from these nations will, in many cases, be headed by local consuls and other dignitaries. There will be added festivities with a grand parade of all nations following the Saturday concert.

Karl Krueger, distinguished Viennese conductor, who has lead the Seattle Symphony Orchestra for many years, will wield the baton during this week. The Bowl program committee has arranged numbers by composers representing the nations attending.

Further plans will be announced at the International Week campaign breakfast Tuesday at noon.

Funeral Plans for Dr. Peters Uncompleted

Funeral arrangements for Dr. Lulu Hunt Peters, formerly of Los Angeles and known as an expert on dietetics, who died Friday in London, have not been completed, according to her sister, Mrs. H. W. W. Perkins, 4947 Melrose Hill. Mrs. Perkins was apprised of her sister's death by radio.

Dr. Peters was the author of several books and a syndicated series of articles on diet and health.

Dr. Peters, who recently had been living in New York, started on a tour of foreign countries with a committee of 100 physicians from America.

Mrs. Ray Blum, secretary of Dr. Peters, will take charge of the funeral arrangements. Mrs. Blum sailed on the Mauretania from New York yesterday for London.

WOMAN ASKS $26,550 FOR PROMISE BREACH

Demanding $26,550 and a share of property asserted to have been accumulated during a "trial marriage," Mrs. Rose L. Kaufman yesterday sued Charles Latterman for breach of promise to marry, and an accounting. Both parties are divorced, according to the complaint and Latterman promised to marry her in ten months, she asserts. Whereupon the couple began housekeeping.

WATCH DEAL FRAUD ACCUSATIONS MADE

Arnold Stern, former salesman for the Golfaker Watch Company, is charged with grand theft in a complaint issued by the District Attorney yesterday and signed by Louis Berman, brother of Jacob Berman, central figure in the Julian Petroleum Corporation crash inquiry.

Stern is accused of selling 100 of the watches valued at $3.50 each and keeping the proceeds. Bail is $1000.

THE PARKER IDEA IN DENTISTRY

THE Parker Idea is to spread information everywhere about the importance of good teeth, because good teeth stand for good health:

—to make everything in dentistry perfectly plain to the people;

—to render to the great masses, at a moderate price, the same class of dental work that only the few could afford in the past;

—to practice dentistry according to a System such as is used in banks and other successful business institutions;

—to conduct the dental business on a large scale, because that is the only way the cost of good dentistry can be cut down;

—to improve the lot of the dentist himself, so that he can make a better living than when he works alone;

—to take the fear of pain out of dentistry and give full satisfaction to patients;

—to put good dentistry within the financial reach of all.

There are 31 dental offices in the United States and Canada operated by dentists using the Parker System.

If you think the foregoing ideals are worthy why not benefit yourself by visiting a dentist using this System?

LANDMARK SAVING PRAISED

Steps taken to preserve Los Angeles landmarks were applauded yesterday by D. D. Moore, city librarian of New Orleans and former publisher of the New Orleans Times-Picayune, who plans to return to his home today after a week here for the convention of the American Library Association.

Speaking from experience as an active force in New Orleans public affairs, including the safeguarding of that city's French and Spanish heritage, Moore praised the action of city leaders in keeping alive memories of Los Angeles' richly historical past by creating the Paseo de Los Angeles, in the Plaza district.

Moore told of church and governmental structures saved for future generations in New Orleans. A generous part of the early quarters of the city, he said, will probably be preserved. One early structure was conveyed to the city recently, he said, and it is anticipated others will be turned over to the municipality later.

New Orleans will be host to the members of the library organization in 1932 and the visitor expressed the thought that they will find many of the historical buildings engrossing.

Moore was associated with the Times-Picayune for twenty-eight years, thirteen years as publisher. He served on a number of city boards, including the library board, and was asked to accept the librarianship about two years ago.

New Orleans has more than a past, however, Moore commented in discussing the city's history. It is immensely active in a business way, serving as a warehouse for the entire Mississippi Valley. In illustration, Moore pointed out that one-third of the coffee consumed in the United States comes into the country through New Orleans. Carrying out of the waterways program, which will bring New Orleans into closer commercial contact with leading cities of the Middle West, will have the effect of greatly increasing trade in New Orleans, he said.

OIL AND WATER BATTLE RAGES

Exploitation of Sea Beach at Venice Stirs Storm

Relative Value of Wells or Recreation Weighed

Contenders Agree Only That They Can't Coexist

every indication of doing, one reasonably may expect to see virtually the entire water-front line of private properties from Washington street to Sixty-sixth avenue, or Playa del Rey, dotted with a line of oil derricks. Adjacent properties also are dotted with derricks or are in preparation for drilling.

All of this has not taken place without much protesting about losing a quaint and picturesque beach-front community to the oil industry. On the other side a petition containing as many as 3150 names begs city officials to allow oil to be gotten where it can be. It is not easy to forbid a property owner in whatever circumstances from going after a fortune beneath his lot, city officials have found. This question rages on, but meanwhile oil derricks are springing up like mushrooms.

CITY'S PROBLEM

Then comes the question of what the city shall do with its property.

From Washington street to Playa del Rey the city owns a narrow strip of beach front, a mile and a half or three-quarters long. Between Washington street and Fifty-first avenue with a few lots excepted, it separates private properties from mean high tide line by about 100 feet, although in some places this has been "scoured" out by waves to almost no width at all. From Fifty-first to Sixty-sixth avenue the city beach strip intervening between mean high tide line and private property line varies from nothing at all to about forty feet at Sixty-sixth avenue. The beach strip is controlled by the Playground and Recreation Department.

That the transforming of the water front and adjacent area at Venice beach from a great and rising recreational and bathing center into an oil field of whatever stable future is working mischief to the place as a recreation and bathing beach is admitted generally. That it will do considerably more as it expands also is admitted generally, especially if oil operations result in contamination of the surf. The Playground Department views the situation with alarm. It has about come to believe that its Venice beach strip is more or less doomed for the life of the oil field. Then comes the question of what to do about it.

WHAT TO DO

Under prevailing restrictions the department cannot under any circumstances permit drilling for oil on its beach strip. But it possibly might permit oil companies to drill in the ocean, say 300 feet out from the shore, department officials said. It could use the revenue thus obtained to buy beach elsewhere, say just north of Santa Monica Canyon, where it once began a movement to that end, and so virtually abandon the Venice beach until after the oil industry fades out. It could use the revenue to intensify accommodations at its other two beaches and to restore the Venice beach after the end of the oil exploitation.

Three oil interests are offering to lease the ocean from the department for a distance of all or part of the approximately mile and one-half from Washington street to Sixty-sixth street. They would operate wells in the ocean from piers built out from the city beach strip or from barges anchored offshore and would stay 300 feet out from the shore line. The proposals came from Stuart M. Salisbury, attorney for an unnamed "one of the four major oil companies; Philip L. Bixby, an operator, and from Britt & Whitehead, a company. The latter would lease only a part of the distance.

QUESTIONABLE RIGHT

The hottest kind of a controversy is raging over the question of ocean leasing by the city. Protests have been presented by the Venice Chamber of Commerce, Del Rey Improvement Association and many individuals. Among the individuals is Lewis Stone, the actor, who owns a Venice beach home. He has sued to enjoin the department from making any such lease. This case is pending.

The controversy has become so acrimonious in some quarters that there are charges that among those who loudly cry "Save the Beaches" are beach property owners who have already leased their lots for oil exploitation and now wish to prevent offset drilling by the city. It is pointed out that if the city permits no drilling in the ocean water-front oil pumpers will have just that much more oil to draw out through their own wells. Various other "ulterior motives" charges are flying thick and heavy.

BEST OFFER

Under the most comprehensive lease proposal, that from Salisbury, his interests would build three piers out from city property to possibly 3000 feet. On these three they would drill at least twelve wells in all. They would pay the city a one-eighth royalty until the wells returned the cost of the piers and one-sixth royalty thereafter. The piers would be public property and open to the public after the wells go on production. Bixby's proposal is rather general and offers 20 per cent royalty. Britt & Whitehead pay one-sixth royalty and would lease only between Forty-first and Fifty-first avenues. It would operate from barges if piers be held objectionable.

City playground officials have heard that the department might get $50,000 a month upward out of the most favorable entire-distance lease. However, it is admitted that this is but little more than a pure guess. Some estimators would place $50,000 a month as a more likely maximum.

PRODUCT "SOUR"

Wells now on production in the field run from 200 to 1500 barrels of oil a day. The oil brings from 35 to 67 cents a barrel. It is a "sour" or sulphur-laden oil, one that refineries here are reluctant to handle because there is little such oil here and their equipment is not fitted for refining "sour" oil.

There is a question among experienced oil men about the stability of the field. Some companies have gone into it heavily. Some experienced operators who hold extensive leases in the field have not drilled a hole and have said they may never do so. At least they have not thought enough of the field to take a flying start at getting all they can out of the pool.

The wells cost from $65,000 to $125,000 each, depending on how deep they must go before getting oil in profitable quantities. If the field should turn out well, some oil operators point out, the companies on early production and those who have leased to them may do very well in spite of the "sour" oil. However, if the field is not long-lived and abundant, then the companies and those who have leased their lots will come out poorly, especially the lot owners, who by that time may have gotten little money out of the wells and may find their properties considerably set back for recreational beach purposes. These are hazards of the game.

As to whether the city should virtually abandon the beach for recreational purposes under the looming danger threatening it and try to get money out of it for such purposes elsewhere is a question that must be settled on sounder basis than mere sentimental crying. "Save the beaches." The beach may already be lost or soon will be, some in the Playground Department believe.

Mayor Porter and President Weaver of the department have pledged that before either they or the Council shall do anything toward leasing, plenty of public hearings will be held for all to express their views. In any event nothing can be done until the Stone case is settled, they say.

DRILLING PROTESTORS IN MASS MEETING

VENICE, June 28. (Exclusive)—That one "wild" oil well would ruin fishing in the entire Santa Monica Bay, killing submarine life and destroying spawning grounds, is asserted in a resolution read last night at a meeting of the Del Dey Beach Improvement Association when the Dickenson & Gillespie Auditorium was packed with protestants against the proposal to lease submerged lands off the Venice bathing beach for oil drilling.

The resolution was submitted by Crescent Bay Chapter of Izaak Walton League, and it condemned the oil-drilling project in no uncertain terms. Federal law may be invoked in the controversy, if recommendations of the league are carried out. The law regards protection of fish and navigation.

County Supervisor Quinn declared that he is personally opposed to ocean drilling and will fight against it if any county beach is threatened.

Today's Bible Text

And he gave some apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some pastors and teachers; for all the perfecting of the saints, till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.—Eph. iv:11-13.

REDUCED RATES

Borrowing money has been made easier in New York. The Federal Reserve Bank there has reduced its rediscount rate to 2½ per cent, which is lower than ever known in the history of the institution—or of modern banking. Any alert gentleman wishing to make a lot of dough in Wall street can take his collateral to Gotham and get busy—maybe.

BIG SALARIES

Several executives in this country are said to be drawing salaries of $1,000,000 a year and there is an argument on as to whether any man can really earn this princely price. A man seldom gets more than he earns and if these high-powered gentry are able to break into the $1,000,000 class they must be suspected of earning the money—even if it is ten times as much as the President of the United States is able to command.

MOSQUITOES AND DYNAMITE

One of the big manufacturing plants in the east has been hunting mosquitoes with dynamite. The plant is located near a swamp which is a breeding place for billions of skeetera. These bugs were so terrible that the workmen spent about half their time fighting them off. This crippled production and finally the bosses got a lot of dynamite and blew up the swamp. This not only destroyed the coming crop of mosquitoes, but the explosion made gashes that drained off most of the swamp and thereby eased future propagation to that extent.

A NEEDED INVESTIGATION

The Board of Water and Power Commissioners is to be congratulated on its action ordering a full investigation of the disappearance of departmental records at the height of the recent water-bond campaign, when they were most needed. The investigation should be complete, and should be broad enough to throw light on the civil war that has been going on for years inside the department, of which this disappearance seems likely to be found an incident. It should be put under way without any delay.

Burdett Moody, business agent of the Power Bureau, who admits he ordered the removal and destruction, in part at least, of the missing records, gives an explanation which on its face is unsatisfactory. Further facts may be developed to change the aspect of the affair, but at present there is an unexplained discrepancy between Moody's statement that these records were old and worthless, and the statement of others that they cost thousands of dollars and were regarded as so valuable that they were guarded night and day by special men working in shifts and that only two persons were allowed keys to the room in which they were kept.

Moody's declaration that he needed the room which these records occupied also appears inadequate. They were in three ordinary-sized filing cases which would take up about twelve square feet of floor space. The huge office building which houses the Department of Water and Power is not so crowded as all this. Any casual visitor walking through it can find a good many places where there are more than twelve square feet of unused floor space.

Far more serious than the mere loss of these records, important as they may have been, are the persistently circulated reports that some officials of the department not only did not co-operate in the water-bond campaign, but were actively but secretly hostile to it. If there is any basis for these rumors, explanations, and complete ones, are in order. It is, of course, the right as an individual citizen, of any city employee to oppose any proposed measure, if he honestly believes it is not for the city's best interests, and this without regard to whether his superiors favor it or not. But where such activities are caused by internal politics, and go beyond the scope of individual opinion they argue an unwholesome condition in the department and one ill calculated to serve the public interest.

It is undeniable that there has been bickering and dissension inside the department, and that high officials are at swords' points frequently. In so large a department it is impossible, of course, to bring about complete harmony, nor is it even desirable. Where it serves to bring to public notice waste of public funds or serious mistakes of judgment, watching of officials by each other is genuinely useful. But there is a point beyond which intradepartmental rivalry produces confusion and destruction of morale. And internal politics is always destructive and thoroughly bad for the public service. It is not tolerated in well-managed private business.

The greatest handicap to the efficiency of any department of public service is lack of internal co-operation. The quickest way to correct such a condition is to overhaul the department personnel and get rid of every man with a personal ax to grind, who has been grinding it at public expense. Such overhaul should be conducted at a public hearing, with all the facts brought out, with every man given an opportunity to explain and defend himself. Air and light are the great healers of all sorts of ills, particularly those of the public service; and air and light should be let in abundantly to this situation in the Department of Water and Power.

There is something wrong that needs to be corrected, and it ought not to be really difficult to find out what it is and to correct it.

WHAT PRICE BRAINS?

"Man has developed his brain at the expense of his body." This is the theory advanced by Dr. William J. Mayo in a recent address to the American Medical Association, and there is much that tends to prove it a sound one. It is not only by learning to control his emotions—a factor in man's progress stressed by Dr. Mayo—that man has thrown too great a strain upon his heart and other organs. It would seem that professional and intellectual life generally handicaps the physical system in many other ways.

Spencer held that one of man's first requisites was to be a good animal. It seems manifest that he cannot be a very good animal and a sedentary brain worker at the same time. Carlyle, one of the world's greatest thinkers, was a dyspeptic nearly all his life because of heavy and long-continued mental activity. John Muir said of authorship: "Writing is an unnatural business. Your head gets hot and your feet get cold and you can't digest your meals." George Eliot was harassed by headaches and so were Dickens and Hardy.

Spurgeon was a tremendous success as a preacher, but because of his intensity he rarely knew a day of freedom from bodily pain after middle life. Other preachers, as well as orators and men of science, have found that triumphs gained by intense mental application often have been at the expense of their bodies. Depew, one of the most eloquent of post-prandial speakers, said he could not deliver a speech at a banquet if he had just eaten anything. "My food would get between me and my address," he said.

Too many men have "disnatured themselves," as Montaigne has it, by heavy mental and nervous strain. And it is because modern men are "wise to it" that golf has become a national pastime and relaxation. Our race soon would degenerate if brain and nerve abuse became general. If man is to continue his progress it will be due not merely to his ability to think but also to his being a good animal.

THE BIG CITY

New York has nearly 7,000,000 souls although the borough of Manhattan shrank almost half a million in the last ten years. The dwellers merely moved a little farther out. Our big city is right on London's heels and is likely to surpass it in the next decade. New York is destined to be the world metropolis—until Los Angeles gets her real stride.

The LEE SIDE O' LA
By Lee Shippey

Personal Glimpses of Famous Southlanders

IN THE heart of Movieland, half a block off Hollywood Boulevard and within easy walking distance of two of the biggest studios, lives an American philosopher who is better known in Europe than in Los Angeles, who is recognized in Germany and France as "the spiritual descendant of Emerson" and whose books have been translated into many languages—one of them into more than twenty foreign languages and also into Esperanto.

And yet there are people living around the corner from him who never heard of him.

That man is Ralph Waldo Trine.

Many Unusual People Know Him

Now we don't want to be unfair to Hollywood. When Trine called on Doug Fairbanks, recently, he introduced himself by saying: "You probably don't know who I am, Mr. Fairbanks—"

"Oh, don't I, though?" retorted Doug. "You just wait till you see the specially inscribed copy of one of your books which Henry Ford sent me."

So it cannot be said that Trine is without honor in his own country. All over America people in all walks of life have read his books and are reading them. It takes a pretty loudly heralded best-seller to reach a total sale of 100,000 copies, but Trine's "In Tune With the Infinite," first published in 1898, has reached a sale of close to 800,000 copies. You may not have heard as much about it as you have about the Einstein theory, but far more people really know something about it. No other book of its kind published in this generation has rivaled it. Yet in a neighborhood in which nearly everyone who gets a story into True Stories or Ace High tries to get himself classified as "famous," Trine lives and works so quietly that when we inquired for him at a house within stone-throw of his own the man we questioned said:

"Trine? Oh, yes, he's a writer, isn't he? Well, there's a young fellow named Trine lives in that house down the lane from this street, and I shouldn't wonder if the man you want is his father."

Mrs. Trine laments that Trine doesn't know anything about the value of publicity. But we wonder if one could be a world voice in philosophy and know anything about publicity.

Where Nothing Was Wasted—Not Even Opeself

Trine was born in Mt. Morris, Ill., in 1866. His people had driven ox teams out to Illinois as settlers and had known Lincoln well. His father, though, had turned house painter and Trine grew up as a barefoot boy who had to work for money in his early teens. A bookish aunt had selected the name he was given and the utilitarian atmosphere in which he grew up, the spirit of people who had come out into the raw country to build up a new world for themselves and had been forced to make the most of every natural resource, made him want to gain knowledge and make the most of his brain. By the time he was 16 he had saved up $80 from his earnings and with that capital he walked away to college, sure that with such a start he could earn his way through. It was a very small Lutheran college. Afterward he went to Knox College, from which he was graduated in 1891, and then went to Johns Hopkins. He was no speed marvel, you see. It had taken him twenty-six years to get that far and he was nearly 30 before he got out of school.

Newspaper Assignment Launched Him

He had thought he wanted to be a lawyer, but had turned to literature in school and had won a $100 prize for an essay on the humane treatment of animals. His interest in that subject has never waned and for many years he has been a director of the American Humane Educational Society. When he left Johns Hopkins he went to Boston, where he met the editor of the Boston Transcript and was assigned by that editor to attend and report a conference—a summer camp lasting for weeks—of all sorts of students of thought forces. Edward Everett Hale was there, as were some noted swamis and philosophers. That gathering was the turning point in the career of the eager and intense young man from the prairies. He tried to find himself, to make plain his convictions of the purposes and possibilities of life. And he has been doing that ever since. He returned from that conference to begin the series of "life books," the first being "What All the World Is A-Seeking" in 1896. "In Tune With the Infinite" followed two years later and for thirty-two years has been a growing force in the wide world's trend of thought. When the World War came on the depreciation of the mark caused Trine to lose at least $20,000, while the depreciation of the franc also reduced his royalties seriously. After the war he was many times a trillionaire in marks.

Doesn't Claim Spotlight

Trine is a man with an unusually square jaw, earnest, seeking eyes and a fine forehead. He does not dominate a conversation—anyone can take it right away from him. He speaks rather slowly and builds up his thought so carefully that those who leap to things are likely to snatch it away from him. He cannot write much at home, but goes away to some secluded place where he can be undisturbed, preferably where no one else is within sight or hearing.

His latest book, "The Power That Wins," really is an interview with Henry Ford, or a digest of the conversations he had with Ford during a six-week visit to the automobile manufacturer's home in Dearborn. It is an amazing revelation of Ford's mental reactions—though we imagine the author-philosopher dressed up the manufacturer's ideas considerably in the retelling.

Ford has been reading Trine's books for years and sending them to other people to read. And he is only one of many who do that sort of thing. All over the world there are disciples of Trine, people who believe in his philosophy and set it up for the pattern of their lives.

But just around the corner in Hollywood they don't know very much about him.

MASS BEAUTY

We are told that a New York captain of industry, at the urging of his pastor, decreed that on a certain Monday the 300-odd woman stenographers and clerks in his main office should appear sans make-up. He entered his private office directly from the corridor and seldom saw the workers as a whole. Monday afternoon, a man who puts in big orders was shown into his private den, after passing through the main office, and remarked, "You have the homeliest bunch of office girls in New York." The man who deals in mass production looked over his mass of female help and was shocked. He sent for the head of the female personnel department. On leaving her desk that evening each girl was handed an elaborate make-up package and a courteous note requesting her to use it. Which goes to show that we are creatures of habit and that modern beauty not only is a wholesale commodity, but man realizes that it can be put on and taken off like a shirt.

THE NEW FOURTH

Nowadays one can count his fingers the day after the Fourth of July and find them all practically intact. Folks don't celebrate the day with the explosive vehemence that marked its observance in other times. They may not be more sensible, but their ideas have changed. Instead of unchaining $1000 worth of fireworks they load themselves into the family auto and park themselves in some distant picnic ground—either that or join the thousands cavorting by the sands of the sea. The firecrackers are forgotten.

PRECIOUS PROFILES

New York judge upholds suitor who punches man in the nose for "stepping out" with his girl. Hope for the sake of the movie-hero-loving public that Hollywood does not hear of this.

MORE CHAMPIONS

The promoters might match Schmeling with Carnera and move the championship over into Italy. It would be all right with Mussolini.

WHAT OTHERS THINK ABOUT IT

OFFICIAL RECOGNITION OF FOOD
[New York Herald-Tribune]

The Merchants' Association is publishing 500,000 booklets that extol New York as a summer resort. In the course of its booklet it has touched on a subject that might well be pursued further. This is where it says the visitor can find the dishes of thirty-seven nationalities here.

So far as we know, this is the first time an American city has taken official cognizance of its food, except in the single case of New Orleans. From the various chambers of commerce and similar bodies one receives copious information about freight differentials, taxes, dock facilities and the new union station; but when it comes to the local crabs, muffins and fried chicken, they apparently do not know that such things exist. Yet the prospect of an inviting dish, certainly, is more potent in attracting a visitor than the prospect of an inviting freight differential.

END THE REIGN OF GANGDOM
[Chicago Tribune]

A sixth plank is added today to The Tribune's Platform for Chicagoland. It reads: "End the Reign of Gangdom."

Little need be added by way of explanation. The killers, the racketeers who exact tribute from business men and union labor, the politicians who use and shield the racketeers, the policemen and judges who have been prostituted by the politicians, all must go.

The first duty of any government is the protection of the lives and property of the citizens. Chicago must give that security. To do so, standards of conduct on the part of private citizens as well as public officials must be revised upward. That sounds easy, but in fact it is among the most difficult of achievements. Success depends, first and last, upon the will and the desire to bring about a change. The events of recent weeks have gone far, we believe, to convince the people of Chicago that the gangs must go. We propose to keep that flame burning.

DEMAND AND SUPPLY
[Brunswick Pilot]

Another phase of much-needed national adjustment is disclosed by the fact that there are over 26,000,000 automobiles and less than 1,000,000 hospital beds in this country.

THE WEEK IN POLITICS

BY KYLE D. PALMER

History, if one should be endowed with sufficient energy and initiative to search it carefully, probably would furnish many instances similar to the predicament in which Gov. Young finds himself at this juncture of his campaign for re-election, but it is doubtful that historical precedent would be regarded by the Governor as any palliative of his present woes.

So far as memory serves, Mr. Shakespeare gives no account of the ultimate fate of that engineer mentioned in Hamlet, who was "hoist by his own petard," and again a doubt arises as to the possibility of any comfort for the Governor in an authentic revelation of the hoisted one's experience. The immediate and practical problem before Gov. Young is just how to escape being "hoist" by a political petard of his own manufacture.

During the last two or three days the political atmosphere of California has been rent, so to speak, with cries of anguish and indignation from the Governor's campaign managers. Charges of the most unkind character have been uttered with great prodigality and a general state of excitement has been engendered.

And all because one Milton K. Young, well-known Los Angeles attorney, and a respected Democrat, who has shown his party fealty upon many an occasion, has decided not only to seek the gubernatorial nomination of his own party, but to take advantage of the provisions of California's direct primary act and place his name as an aspirant on the Republican ticket.

Thus, there will be two "Youngs" on the Republican ballot this year.

Of course, there can be little confusion as between Milton K. Young and Calhoun Clement Young, and those Republicans who have not learned of Gov. C. C. Young's identity during his almost four years in office are not likely to vote for any member of the Young family at this late date, anyway.

Really, there is far more comedy in the situation from the standpoint of the public at large than tragedy from the Governor's personal viewpoint—and all because Gov. Young is probably more responsible for his predicament than any other individual in the State.

One might think, indeed, that the Governor's state of mind at this writing could be safely compared with that of a confiding and hopeful citizen who has been bitten by his own dog; for the direct-primary law has been the Governor's political pet for almost two decades. He has watched over it with loving pride, defended it with avidity, praised it without stint, and opposed every attempt to modify it.

And now, after all these years, this particular political chicken has come home to roost. The very principle which the Governor has fought for, and which has received such unfavorable attention from many Republican leaders in all sections of California, is used to his own discomfiture.

Not later than a year ago an earnest attempt was made in the State Legislature to eliminate a clause in the direct-primary law which permits a candidate of one party affiliation to file his name as a candidate with another party. The object of this move was plain and direct and, had it received from the Governor the same overwhelming indorsement given it by State Assemblymen and Senators, it would prevent any and all "Youngs," except of Republican affiliation, from seeking the Republican nomination for Governor.

There is a strange hiatus, not clearly defined, as to what occurred at Sacramento last year after the Senate, with but five negative votes, and the Assembly, with less than a score of "noes," approved an amendment to the primary law stipulating that no candidate for a partisan office might appear on any ballot other than that of the party of his affiliation.

The bill, introduced by Senator Rochester of Los Angeles, went to the Governor's office under its original title, according to Mr. Rochester. Whether it was changed en route, or suffered a mysterious "printer's error," or fell victim to some casual printing accident, the Los Angeles Senator is not informed. He insists that the Legislature meant the law to be changed and that the bill providing for the change was permitted by the Governor to suffer the fate of a pocket veto.

Mr. Rochester, commenting on the situation, somewhat reasonably concludes that: "It will be difficult for the voters to develop a tremendous amount of sympathy or indignation for a situation which Mr. Young not only created, but from year to year has insisted upon maintaining."

In other words, it seems, Gov. Young's well-known and but recently reiterated leanings toward nonpartisanism rob his supporters of much of their ammunition in an inspired attempt to rouse popular resentment. It is far more likely that the populace will be mildly amused.

Senator Rochester takes the matter much to heart, because, having fostered the proposal to their own side of the political fence, and having seen his legislative child smother, as it were, in the pocket veto of Gov. Young, he now witnesses a paradoxical situation in which the Governor's closest advisers bitterly complain against a condition for which their own candidate is chiefly responsible.

The Senator's exposition of the case, which seemingly developed as a result of charges by the Republican Young-for-Governor managers that the Fitts-for-Governor managers had inspired the Democratic Young-for-Governor cohorts to place their candidate on the Republican ticket, is enlightening and is given herewith as a contribution to the general cause of political regularity.

The statement by Senator Rochester:

"I think it is only fair that I should make a statement regarding the controversy over Senate Bill No. 516, as I was the author of that bill.

"My attention has been drawn to a statement by individuals supporting Gov. C. C. Young for re-election in which a charge is made that certain Republican opponents of the Governor are responsible for the action of Milton K. Young, candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor, in placing his name as a Republican candidate also.

"I am not informed as to the truth or falsity of such a charge, and have no interest one way or another with the controversy, but Gov. Young should blame himself and no one else for the situation which made possible the action taken by Milton K. Young.

"It is due to the political policies of the Governor and of his subordinates at Sacramento that such a condition exists and continues to exist under the direct-primary law of California.

"In the State Senate in 1929 I introduced a bill amending the direct-primary law in various respects, the principal change being to delete the provision permitting candidates affiliated with one party to file a nominating petition under another party designation and substituted therefor a clause requiring Republicans to file only as Republicans, Democrats as Democrats, and so on.

"All of my proposed amendments except the one relating to party designation were rejected, but the one amendment submitted to the Legislature was approved with but five dissenting votes in the Senate, and but sixteen negative votes in the Assembly.

"Hence, the statement credited to Chief Deputy Secretary of State Hagerty in Sacramento to the effect that the amendment was intended to be deleted in committee is incorrect. Mr. Hagerty either is misinformed or has not been accurately quoted. I know what the Legislature intended to vote for, as I spoke before the Senate explaining the amendment, and George Bliss of Carpinteria spoke similarly in the Assembly.

"The bill went to the Governor for his signature. I am not informed as to the phrasing of the printed document which the Governor received and permitted to die in pocket veto, but I do know what action was taken by the Legislature and that it was the overwhelming opinion of both legislative houses that the law should be amended.

"As intended to be approved by the Legislature, the amendment follows, filed in the Senate January 17, 1929:

"'No person shall be a candidate of, or candidate for nomination by, a political party other than that party with which such candidate was affiliated thirty-five days before the date of the primary election, as shown by the affidavit of registration of such candidate in the office of the County Clerk; and this certificate shall be the credentials of such candidate to membership in his party.'

"If the bill was in some manner altered by members of the State administration, the Governor may hope to escape responsibility for the present situation by showing that he did not actually veto the bill as approved by the Legislature. However, I am not prepared to say where the responsibility should lie.

"But the fact remains the amendment was intended to be approved by the Senate and Assembly as titled and sent to the Governor, where it was pocket-vetoed by him. Mr. Young has always shown himself opposed to changes in the direct-primary law, and if he finds the field somewhat crowded with Youngs at this time, and one of them a Democrat, he has only himself to blame.

"In my opinion, this needed improvement in our primary act would have been accomplished many years ago if the Governor had not worked so strenuously to defeat every attempt to effect a change in the law as originally sponsored by himself in 1913.

"It will be difficult for the voters to develop a tremendous amount of sympathy or indignation for a situation which Mr. Young not only created, but from year to year has insisted upon maintaining."

Many, no doubt, will agree with the foregoing sentiments.

DOG TALKIES

Humans were not the only workers who found themselves and their jobs seriously disturbed by the advent of the "talkies." Dog colonies in Hollywood and New York studios became a drug on the market. But clever writers and dog lovers have contrived a means of winning back star positions and accompanying salaries for canine actors. The 400 dogs out of work in Hollywood may take heart. For new talking films are being made in which dogs are the actors in a silent film and the players, each of whom is directed by the unseen master's voice, are encouraged to bark. The barks are not recorded, but the mouth motions are, and the silent doggy film is then run through to records made by men and women understudying for the dog stars. Voice and action are then synchronized and we have the talking dog films. Ingenious directors are even planning dog orchestras!

Tied fast to earth

Why then ask more
For you and me
When love like ours
Should bonded be
As earth and sea
And leaf to tree?

THE CRIME HABIT

Some time ago a man in jail mused up about a quart of hi and wrote a most affecting tale to prove that crime is on the blink. He told how first he went astray, and how he went from bad to worse; his moral was, "Crime doesn't pay, it isn't worth a tinker's curse." He was a highly gifted man, but felt the urge to travel right; had he pursued a proper plan he might have been a shining light. But more than half his wasted years were spent in prisons here and there; his narrative was wet with tears, and throbbing with bleak despair. 'Twas published it a magazine, and later in a handsome book; "twill keep some boys," I said, "I ween, from wishing to become a crook. Whoever reads that mournful tale will see that crime's a hoary frost; and he will stick to virtue's trail, if wise, whatever be the cost." I hope about a million lads were warned by that sad tale of crime to shun all sinful gawds and fads, and move to strive for heights sublime. The man who wrote that melo tale served out his stretch and gained release; the warden watched him from the jail, and said, "He'll trouble no police; he's learned his lesson passing well, he's cast his evil tricks away; his lonely vigils in a cell have shown him that crime doesn't pay." This man went forth resolved to be a bright example to all men who would from wickedness be free, and dodge the hoosegow or the pen. But crime's a habit hard to shake, and virtue palls on aging wights who have for years been prone to make high festival through godless nights. And so this man who warned all men that crime's a nuisance and a bore, some days ago was pinched again for crimes like those he'd pulled before.

CHANGE IN RADIO CONTROL AIM OF NEW LEGISLATION

Sirovich Bill Would Restore Power to Commerce Department and Give Appeals to Board

BY JOHN S. DAGGETT

Abandonment of the present method of controlling radio and the plan of administration of the radio laws to the Department of Commerce are contemplated in legislation introduced in the House by Representative Sirovich of New York.

The Federal Radio Commission would become the Federal Radio Board of Appeals, whose powers would be limited to passing upon questions of law on appeal from the department, where radio control would be vested in an officer to be known as the director of radio.

The purpose of the bill is to carry out the original idea back of the radio act of 1927, which provided that the radio commission should be created for one year, during which it was to become an appellate body to which could be taken questions not satisfactorily settled in the Department of Commerce, to which actual control was to be returned. This plan was approved by President Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce.

ENTRENCHED

The three years which have elapsed since enactment of the original act have seen the Radio Commission solidly intrenched as a permanent body, now planning to absorb the radio division of the Department of Commerce, and eventually to be given legally permanent status as the Federal Communications Commission under the bill introduced by Senator Cousens of Oregon.

In the view of many members of Congress, it never was the intention to add to the number of permanent commissions with which the public is burdened. They hold that the Radio Commission is a temporary commission, created for the purpose of clearing up the chaos which resulted from a court decision denying the authority of the Department of Commerce to regulate radio under the law of 1912. In order to do this, it was to have absolute authority over radio for one year. The intention, it was solemnly promised, would be an exception to the rule that, once established, no government body is ever abandoned. At the conclusion of its first year, the commission reported that it had not succeeded in accomplishing its purpose and would need another year of control. At the end of the second year it pointed out that much remained to be done before conditions could be considered satisfactory. Then it was asserted that new developments in the radio situation demanded continuance of the large organization which by that time had been built up. Weary of giving it annual renewals of life, Congress a few months ago provided that the commission should continue until new radio legislation is enacted.

The Sirovich bill would restore the original plan, returning jurisdiction over radio to the Department of Commerce, providing a body which will consider appeals from the department's decisions, and retaining final decision on controversies involving legal points in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. It is represented that President Hoover is favorably inclined toward this plan, as being in line with the original policy, but there is likely to be considerable opposition from Senator Cousens and others who are pushing the communications commission bill.

HORSE SHOW BILLS TO BE DIVERSIFIED

Beverly Hills Event Will Have Variety of Features; Chairman Announces

N. R. Vail, chairman of the Beverly Hills Horse Show committee, will present diversified programs at the four performances to be given Friday and Saturday, July 18 and 19, next. Net proceeds of the show, which is sponsored by the Beverly Hills Chamber of Commerce, are to be given to the Metropolitan Bridle Paths Association for expansion of bridle paths in and around Los Angeles.

"The increasing popular favor of the bridle path recalls the development of golf as a popular pastime," said Mr. Vail. "Not so many years ago golf was regarded as a recreation solely for those of wealth and leisure. Horseback riding has been looked upon in somewhat the same light until recently. Here in the metropolitan area of Los Angeles we have popularized the bridle paths. When some 7000 riders are out every week-end, the appeal is evident. We hope to develop the finest system of riding paths in the world."

Harrold English was named chairman of the public relations committee, consisting of Robert Morrison, James Long Wright, Lawrence Black, G. E. Nagle, Sr., Clem Glass and William Richards.

Irving H. Hellman, president of the Beverly Hills Horse Show Association, announced selection of the following judges:

Walter Crouch of Reseda to judge fine harness horses; three and five-gaited saddle horses and harness ponies; Guy C. Woodin of Los Angeles to judge hunters and jumpers; Walter M. Fagan of Beverly to judge stock horses; Neil McCarthy to judge polo ponies, and W. A. Alderson to judge miscellaneous classes.

Dedication of Church Set for This Afternoon

Dedication of the Second Presbyterian Church, recently completed at North Griffith avenue and Altura street at an approximate cost of $35,000, will be conducted at 3:15 p.m. today. Rev. Henry C. Buell is the pastor.

Participating at the services will be Drs. George Butterfield, Moses Breese, William Manshardt, moderator of the Presbytery of Los Angeles; William Roberts, president of the Ministerial Association, and Dr. S. P. MacLennan, who will preach the dedication sermon.

The church, which has a membership of 250, was organized in 1882 by Rev. J. W. Ellis, with Rev. J. M. Boal as the first pastor. The dedicatory services today will be attended by several of the former pastors.

DOHENY WILL PRESERVE PIONEER OIL DERRICK HERE

Edward L. Doheny, father of the oil industry in Southern California, is seeking the oldest oil derrick under his management that is still standing. Frank R. Seaver, a Doheny executive, said yesterday that Mr. Doheny, whose wells were dug in what is now the fifth largest city of the United States, knows he cannot find his first well because it has disappeared. However, he does want to find the oldest of the early ones so that he can preserve it, even as Henry Ford preserved the example of the first model of his automobile.

Old-timers of Los Angeles, whose memories take them back to the early '90's, have been asked to assist in the search and already some of the veterans of the Doheny organization have been at work hunting for that particular derrick that marks at least one of the first of the primitive wells drilled in Los Angeles.

The first well is gone, states Mr. Seaver, wiped out by the progress and march of prosperity that it helped to start. The first well was near the junction of what today is Glendale and Beverly Boulevards. It was dug by hand, with pick and shovel, by Mr. Doheny himself, to a depth of 145 feet. At this point the gas pressure became so strong that it was impossible for further pick and shovel work.

So a spring pole was added to the equipment. This innovation enabled the diggers to add another fifteen feet. At the startling depth of 160 feet, oil began to flow and the yield was hoisted to the top of the shaft at the rate of twelve to fourteen barrels a day.

Today wells almost two miles deep yield up to thousands of barrels a day, for one of the Doheny wells in Mexico still holds the world's record of something like 364,000 barrels a day.

The initial Doheny well also found a market for its product. The firm of J. D. Hooker & Co. paid $2.50 a barrel for it and dipped pipes used for culverts and sewers, into the oil for preservative purposes. The market outlet not being sufficient, the Troy Laundry was persuaded to use oil as fuel in heating water for doing the 1893 linen of the city.

Oil wells of old were straight but not deep. Came greater depths but straightness and trueness had to be sacrificed to attain greater penetration.

HEADQUARTERS CHANGED

After tomorrow the headquarters of the First Reserve District, Organized Reserves, United States Army, and the local offices of the Coast Artillery Reserve, will be in Rooms 238-47, Brownstein-Louis Building, 751 South Figueroa street, it was announced yesterday.

FLORIDA SEEKS NEW TOURISTS

Tourists in Summer Season Travel Her Aim

Information Requested of All-Year Club

Methods Used Here May be Copied in South

That Florida plans to establish that State as an all-year vacation resort rivaling Southern California by creating a summer tourist season to match her heavy winter season and thus get even a greater share of the millions spent by Americans for pleasure travel was revealed yesterday by John B. Browne, chairman of the advertising committee of the All-Year Club, Southern California's national tourist advertising organization.

During the last week three telegrams and several letters have been received from Florida officials requesting definite information regarding the successful advertising and publicity campaigns as conducted by the All-Year Club during the last nine years.

PLANS ANNOUNCED

"Florida has a large winter tourist season, but practically no summer tourists as the nation today regards Florida summers like they did Southern California's summers nine years ago," said Chairman Browne yesterday.

"No one thinks of going to Florida in the summer, but organizations there are planning to launch an advertising and publicity campaign in an effort to establish a summer tourist season. Florida's many years of 'free publicity' have failed to attract visitors during the summer months.

"This same situation existed previous to 1921 in Southern California, which enjoyed a brief winter tourist season and lacked a coordinated national tourist advertising campaign.

GAINS REVEALED

"By creating a major summer season and increasing and lengthening the winter season the All-Year Club and other co-operative agencies in this section have built up an infant industry until it ranks today as the third largest source of our primary income, and is, therefore, a major factor in the creation of local employment.

"Last year, 1,068,723 tourists spent $118,526,592 in the ten Southern California counties and of this number 570,085 visited the California Southland last summer, spending $119,620,936.

"It is estimated that America's expenditures for travel amount to $4,000,000,000 annually, and efforts put forth by European nations to divert more of this money to their own countries as well as the flood of United States and Canadian competition make it necessary for Southern California to exert every effort in order to hold its tourist business and show substantial gain each year."

Peace Prospect in Europe Will Get Attention

Prospects of peace in Europe, an important national and international financial problems will be discussed at the two-day summer meeting, July 8-9, of the Pacific Southwest Academy, which will be held in connection with the summer session of the University of California at Los Angeles.

The opening session will be held in the Educational Building auditorium of U.C.L.A. and subsequent meetings will be divided between that auditorium and Royce Hall auditorium.

At 12:30 p.m. on July 9 there will be a subscription luncheon at the Beverly Hills Hotel.

Why Fat Men Stay Fat

"The trouble with me, and I guess this applies to 99% of the men who are putting on weight, I didn't have enough energy or "pep" to keep it off. Lost all interest in any healthy activity and just loafed around accumulating the old pounds until I got that "Kruschen feeling."

Start taking Kruschen Salts — that's the common-sense way to reduce—you don't take them with the idea that they possess reducing qualities in themselves. This is what they do—they clean out the impurities in your blood by keeping the bowels, kidneys and liver in splendid working shape and till you with that vigor and tireless energy you'd most forgotten had existed.

As a result instead of planning your day in an easy chair every free moment spent letting flabby fat accumulate you find an urge for activity that keeps you moving around doing the things you've always wanted to do and needed to do to keep you in good condition.

Then watch the pounds slide off!

Kruschen Salts are the up-to-date essential of Youth. Take one half teaspoonful in a glass of hot or cold water every morning and every 2 months a bottle. If they don't change your whole system, reduction, or both, and make you feel 20 years younger, you can have your money back. Get a 4 weeks' supply at 50 cent bottle of Kruschen Salts from any druggist anywhere in the world.—[Advertisement.]

Are There A Million DIABETICS in this country? Estimates say there are, but there are no statistics to prove it. Diabetes is an insidious condition. Its symptoms, however, are numerous. A small book listing some of the symptoms, suspected causes and results of this condition and of a method of treatment which many can be had by sending a stamp to M. Richartz, Inc., Dept. 31, 220 West 42nd St., New York. Nine years of success address.—[Advertisement.]

Why Fat Men Stay Fat

The trouble with me, and I guess it applies to 99% of the men who are fighting on weight, I didn't have the energy or "pep" to keep it off. Lost all interest in any healthy activity and just loafed around accumulating the old pounds and I got that "Kruschen feeling."

Then taking Kruschen Salts — that's the common-sense way to reduce—but it also deals with the idea that they are merely reducing qualities in themselves. This is what they do—they clean out the impurities in your blood by keeping the bowels, kidneys and liver in splendid working shape and fill you with a keen and tireless energy you'd most forgotten had existed.

Be a man! Instead of planting yourself in an easy chair every free moment and letting fat accumulate, get up and use for activity that energy you now use in avoiding doing the things you've wanted to do and needed to do for your health's condition.

Then watch the pounds slide off!

Kruschen Salts are the up-to-date Elixir of Youth. Take one half teaspoonful in a glass of hot or cold water every morning and every morning that it "don't" changes your whole system, go back and get the dollar you paid for them. Get a bottle of Kruschen Salts—it weighs—at any Owl and Liggett Store or any progressive druggist anywhere in the world.—[Advertisement.

Are There A Million DIABETICS

in this country? Estimates say there are. Of course there are no statistics to prove this. Diabetes is an insidious condition. Its symptoms, however, are numerous. JUBILEE PROGRAM TO BE VARIED

Ziegfeld to Direct Bowl Presentation

Among Wednesday's Entertainers

STAGED under the guiding hand of Florenz Ziegfeld, the annual Hollywood Midsummer Jubilee at Hollywood Bowl Wednesday night looms as one of the most interesting events of the week.

Finishing touches are now being applied to the special additions to the Bowl stage for the film colony's testimonial to the Los Angeles Sanatorium, the free and nonsectarian tuberculosis institution at Duarte, while Ziegfeld whips into shape an array of celebrities to appear in the jubilee performance.

Opera, jazz, elaborate revue presentations and sparkling personalities are being combined on the program, which will feature stars of all the major studios and outstanding free-lance personalities.

Don Jose Mojica and Everett Marshall, brought to the talking screen from the operatic stage, will be particular features of the entertainment.

Mojica will head the list of Fox Film players, who will include: Marjorie White and Frankie Richardson, Ted Healy and his "Racketeers," Eddie Tierney, Richard Keene, juvenile, J. Harold Murray, the studio mixed vocal ensemble of twenty-four voices and twenty-six "Movietone Follies" misses in a revue presentation with musical arrangement directed by Arthur Kay.

Radio Pictures will send Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey, the studio's colored singing chorus and a unit of the Tiller "Sunshine Girls."

Abe Lyman and his orchestra will present a musical highlight, while another outstanding feature will be a special revue from the Warner Brothers and First National studios, staged by Larry Ceballos.

From the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios will come Charles King, Lottice Howell, Cliff (Ukulele Ike) Edwards and Dance Director Sammy Lee's beauties in another revue; while Paramount-Publix will present Lillian Roth, Harry Green and little Mitzi Green.

Other features include: The Los Angeles Grand Opera Chorus, the Albertina Rasch Ballet, the Mosconi Brothers with their sixteen ballet dancers, Rose Perfect, and the South Pasadena American Legion Post No. 140 Drum and Bugle Corps of forty-eight pieces.

Giant Railway Rifle Reaches Harbor's Fort

The port's defenses were increased yesterday morning by the arrival of the second fourteen-inch, .53-caliber railway rifle to be assigned to Fort MacArthur. The 730,000-pound piece of ordnance was brought from the Benecia arsenal by Capt. A. L. Parmalee and a detail of twelve men from the Sixty-third Coast Artillery, stationed here, via the Southern Pacific lines.

A companion gun arrived at Fort MacArthur in November, 1925. Each gun has an extreme range of 54,600 yards, firing a 1560-pound projectile.

Strategical plans of the War Department provide for the basing of a number of similar railway batteries at Fort MacArthur.

King Baggot's Wife Charges Nonsupport

Desertion and nonsupport are the reasons given by Mrs. Ruth Baggot for desiring a divorce from her husband, King Baggot, movie, director, in her complaint filed yesterday by the law firm of Youngworth, McClean & Hartman.

No details of the separation are mentioned, although there was a property settlement signed October 30, 1926, it is asserted. The couple was married at Fort Lee, N. J., December 3, 1912, and separated August 1, 1928. There is one son, Robert King Baggot, now 16 years of age.

INITIATIVE PROPOSAL ASSAILED

Chiropractors Open War on Suggested New Measure to Regulate Practice

The board of directors of the California Chiropractic Association, in executive session last night, unanimously declared war on the proposed initiative measure governing chiropractic practice in California.

The proposed initiative measure, which contemplates the repeal of the old law and the substitution of a new regulatory act, is sponsored by a minority group of local chiropractors with Statewide connections. Petitions are being circulated for the required number of names to place the proposed act on the ballot.

The present law under which chiropractic is licensed and governed in California was passed in 1922 by a majority vote of 153,000.

"This new measure is unquestionably the most vicious and anti-chiropractic legislation ever proposed under the guise of chiropractic betterment," said Dr. C. W. Hoffman, president of the southern division and a member of the board of directors of the California Chiropractic Association.

"Under its provisions chiropractic could be completely eliminated from California within five years. The proposed initiative act holds that the will of the Board of Chiropractic Examiners is above the law of the State. The board could terminate the license of any chiropractor, at any time, on the slightest pretext and without redress from courts of law. Rehearings in any case are not allowed under the plan submitted."

Biscuit Concern Official Selected for Higher Post

Phil J. Swearingen, for nearly twenty-three years associated with Bishop & Co., which is a part of the National Biscuit Company, received congratulations yesterday on his appointment as general sales manager of the company.

The appointment was announced by President W. T. Bishop on Friday at the monthly meeting of nearly 200 salesmen. Bishop predicted that greater co-operation throughout the organization and Swearingen spoke in reply.

Chamber's Isle Trip Postponed

Announcement that the annual excursion of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce to Hawaii will not leave this year until September 6, necessitating a postponement of the previously announced departure date of August 2, was made yesterday by President Austin of the organization. Austin said the tour will again be made on the Lasseo liner, City of Los Angeles, with details of the itinerary being arranged under the auspices of Charles P. Bayer, field secretary.

Reservations for the tour are now open in the chamber's field service department.

Outside Loop Record Sought

Gordon F. Mounce, the first man ever to make an outside loops with a small-motored plane, will attempt today to set a new outside-looping record at the Los Angeles Municipal Airport for airplanes powered with motors of 100 horsepower or less, he announced yesterday. The present record of eighteen outside loops is held by Tex Rankin, he said.

Mounce will use a fleet training plane powered with a 100-horsepower Kinner motor.

PUBLICITY JUDGMENT AWARDED TO HEIFETZ

Publicity work for Nils Asther, film actor, is worth $25 a week, Municipal Judge Pope decided yesterday in awarding Louis E. Heifetz of Hollywood a judgment of $175 against Asther and J. L. Angus, his former business manager.

Heifetz sued the two for $600, which he asserted was due for publicity work and for a talking-picture prologue which he said he wrote for Asther for a vaudeville act in which the latter planned to appear. Judge Pope denied Heifetz compensation for the prologue after Asther and Angus testified they did not agree to have the work done by the writer. They said he worked for seven weeks as publicity man.

NINTH PLANET'S STATUS FIXED

Position Among Major Solar Bodies Established

Astronomers Here Report Results of Studies

Sky Pictures of Long Ago Yield Added Data

such an extent that it is nearly four times as long as broad.

VARYING DISTANCES

The mean distance of that amazingly eccentric orbit from the sun, according to Dr. Seth B. Nicholson, is 39.9 astronomical units, one astronomical unit being the mean distance between the earth and sun. But the sun is not in the center of the flattened ring; it is much nearer one end. When nearest the sun, the distance is only 29.60 astronomical units, but when farthest away, the distance is 50.1 astronomical units.

The great circle around which Neptune (Pluto's nearest neighbor) travels is 30.1 astronomical units from the sun. "It is quite apparent, therefore," said Dr. Nicholson, "that there are times when Pluto comes nearer to the sun than Neptune ever comes."

If Pluto's orbit did not tilt, it would actually cross Neptune's path twice during its year, and no telling what might happen if both planets arrived at the crossing at the same time. Pluto is thought to be about the same size as the earth. Its size can be measured only by its brightness, or dimness, figured in terms of distance.

POINT OF LIGHT

The new planet is too far away to look like a disk. Even though the 100-inch telescope, it looks like a point of light. If it showed a disk, its diameter could be definitely determined, but a point of light has no apparent diameter. It is large enough, however, to reflect sufficient light across nearly forty times the distance between the earth and the sun to dot a photographic plate. Measured by its brightness, Pluto is a planet of the fifteenth magnitude, according to the calculations made at Mt. Wilson.

Its period of revolution, or year, is 251.08 times as long as one of earth's size. Neptune's period is 165 years.

Since the intensity of light varies inversely as the square of the distance, the sunlight which lands on Pluto when it is closest to the sun would be only one nine-hundredths as intense as sunlight on the earth. That fact adds weight to the contentions of those who assert it is as large, say, as Neptune. Because of its distance it would have to be quite large, in a planetary scale, in order to reflect enough of the thin light it receives across some 3,000,000,000 miles of space to impress its image even dimly on a photographic plate.

Large or small, however, Pluto with all its eccentricity and peculiarities is no longer viewed as a pretender, but as a major planet, and probably the oldest, according to Mt. Wilson astronomers.

Fall May Cause Woman's Death

At the Georgia-street Receiving Hospital, where Miss Octavia was taken, it was found that she had injuries which surgeons say probably will cause her death. Police believe her fall was accidental.

The purloined truck belongs to Leo Desponcian, of the Fruit Exchange, and the Negro, who gave his name as Eddie Williams, 24 years of age, no address, was found to be a parole violator. He was booked on a grand theft charge.

SANHUBER NEAR CLOSE OF TRIAL

Jury Probably Will Receive Case Wednesday Night

"Ghost Man" Goes on With Testimony Tomorrow

State Will Present Three Rebuttal Witnesses

End of the trial of Otto Sanhuber, etiarged with the murder in 1922 of Fred Oesterreich, came in sight yesterday when both prosecution and defense informed Superior Judge Hardy, before whom the so-called ghost of the garret has been on trial for the past three weeks, that they will rest their cases before tomorrow night.

In view of these promises, Judge Hardy declared that he hopes to give the case to the jury of six men and six women before Wednesday's adjournment, and a verdict, therefore, may be possible by Wednesday night.

When court adjourned Friday Sanhuber had been under cross-examination for approximately one and one-half days and still stuck to his story that he did not murder Oesterreich, despite previous asserted confessions. Court will convene at 9 a.m. tomorrow and the "ghost man's" testimony is expected to be concluded within an hour.

Dep. Dist.-Attys. Costello and Rasselt said yesterday that they have only three rebutial witnesses for the State, none of whom is expected to testify at great length. Although arguments to the jury in a murder case cannot be limited by the court, both sides have indicated that their statements to the jury will be relatively short.

YEAR IN JAIL FOR HOWELL

Jealous Suitor Pleads Guilty to Shooting of Widow at Fellows

BAKERSFIELD, June 28.—O. H. Howell yesterday pleaded guilty to shooting Mrs. Mary Hendricks, Fellows widow, and was sentenced by Superior Judge E. F. Brittan to serve one year in the County Jail. Sentence was passed after numerous character witnesses had testified that this was the first time Howell had been in any serious trouble and that his character had always been good.

Jealous over the reported attention of another man, the defendant quarreled with Mrs. Hendricks, who is the proprietor of a store in Fellows. He pulled out a revolver and fired at Mrs. Hendricks, the bullet shattering her arm.

Following the shooting Howell drove away in his car and spent several hours in a canyon on the West Side before he surrendered to the Sheriff's office.

Grape Workers at Visalia Find Signers Scarce

VISALIA, June 28.—The opening day of the final drive for grape-control contracts in this district was slow, according to campaign leaders. Twenty-five business men and growers of this section have undertaken to obtain signatures for the 123 contracts which remain unsigned in this district.

After working all day members of the committee reported two contracts signed. Some of the workers, however, have signatures which have not been reported.

There are about 5500 acres in this district, and only about 10 per cent of this is signed up. The acreage signed up represents about thirty-three growers of this vicinity.

SCHOOLS ASK MILLIONS

Kern County Institutions Seek $3,660,921 for New Year, an Increase of $430,905

BAKERSFIELD, June 28.—Kern county will strip $3,660,921 from its bank roll during 1930-31 for the support of its public schools, according to the budgets for kindergartens, elementary and high schools, filed for next year with Herbert L. Healy, county superintendent of schools. This is $430,905 more than was asked last year.

The largest sum is sought for the elementary schools which are asking $2,090,502 this year in comparison to $1,872,589 last year. The 1930-31 budgets of the six high schools total $1,400,410 as compared to $1,241,627 for the year previous. Kindergarten budgets for the forthcoming school year total $169,909 as compared to $115,790 in 1929-30.

The increase in the budgets this year is mostly due to the amounts labeled capital outlay which means there will be considerable building in the county this summer to increase school facilities as well as purchase of school lands and general improvements. Economy programs in effect last year have been abandoned in some measure because of pressure of increased pupil enrollment.

Some of the major building activities are being carried on here where a new grammar school, the Horace Mann, and a new high school building which will cost approximately $125,000, are being erected. Tehachapi Valley Union High School is erecting its first building this summer. Taft, Delano, and Wasco have large sums under capital outlay.

The budgets range in amounts from the $747,900 asked for the Kern County Union High School to $1600 for the support of the Landers Rural Grammar School, the smallest budget submitted.

ELECTRICAL BRAIN RUNS TANK FARM

Tulsa Oil Exposition to Have Permanent Plant For Experiments

TULSA (Okla.) June 28. (AP)—An "electrical brain" is to operate a vast oil tank farm being built as a permanent experimental station by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, petroleum division, at the International Petroleum Exposition and Congress grounds here.

Pressure produced in the various tanks by oil will be communicated to the "electrical brain" in the pump station which thus will "know" exactly when fluid from a full tank should be run into another in which the oil level is low.

A break in either feeding or emptying lines will be answered promptly by a cessation of flow through the defective pipe.

A $200,000 building program is in progress. The exposition will be held this year from October 4 to 11.

SHIP PACT ENDS LONG RATE WAR

Kerr and Java Pacific Reach Understanding

September Set for Start of New Agreement

Dollar, Kleveness Lines Due to Follow Suit

BY WAYNE B. CAVE

The bitter, rate-slashing war raging for months between lines plying between the Pacific Coast and Dutch East Indies has come to an abrupt end, and in its stead rises a noncompetitive service between the two principals, the British-owned Kerr Line and the Dutch-owned Java Pacific Line.

It will become effective in September. The arrangement provides for the spacing of sailings, so that a Kerr vessel sails from here early each month, a Java Pacific carrier late each month. This, coupled with agreements on rates, eliminates entirely the competitive features except that separate terminals and agents will be maintained as they are now.

The agreement is the outgrowth of parleys in Amsterdam and New York, brought on by the rate strife of months, which for a time threatened the entire rate structure of trans-Pacific conferences. The new rates, it is understood, will be met by two other less-interested lines, the Dollar Steamship Lines and Kleveness Line.

Ships of both the Kerr and the Java Pacific companies will touch practically the same ports throughout the Dutch East Indies and Straits Settlements, as well as on the Pacific Coast.

HAMBURG-AMERICAN SENDING NEW LINER

Marking the seventh consecutive new liner put into the Hamburg-American service between Northern Europe and the Pacific Coast, the passenger steamer Vancouver is due here July 2 on her maiden voyage, with her capacity of fifty passengers and with holds full of freight.

Among the twenty-nine travelers disembarking here is Richard Henderson, known as Roy Henderson, Yorkshire comedian, for years one of London's popular actors. He is accompanied by Mrs. Henderson, two daughters and a son.

The Vancouver, and the motor liner Los Angeles are understood to have been allocated in the Hamburg-American-North German Lloyd merger to the latter company. However, for passenger purposes they and the other five Hapag liners will continue being served by W. P. Montague's Hapag offices at 807 South Hill street. Williams, Dimond Co., will handle freight on the Vancouver and Los Angeles as well as other North German Lloyd ships, but Lassco will continue handling cargo of the five Hapag liners.

Three hundred and thirty-five passengers disembarked from the Lassco cabin liner Calawaii, in yesterday noon from Hawaii, among them being Ralph Milbanke, exporter of blooded race horses from South Ireland, en route home from Australia. Passage of the liner through plant quarantine was made complicated when the Coast Guard patrol boat, assisting in the start of a yacht race, waited till the Calawaii dropped anchor before ordering the ship to clear the course for the race. The Calawaii will enter Lassco's new schedule of quick turn-arounds this trip, and will depart again for Hawaii July 1, with more than 100 travelers.

One hundred and ninety-two commercial vessels entered Los Angeles Harbor during the week ended last night, within three of the record established the previous week, according to the Marine Exchange. Of them seventy carried passengers, fifty-seven general cargo, forty-eight petroleum and seventeen lumber. Lumber receipts were slightly up, 21,391,000 board feet, compared with 21,198,000 the week before, while oil shipments dropped to 2,420,894 barrels. The all-time record of 3,370,128 barrels was set the previous week.

Prof. F. W. Campbell, Stanford botanist, was among the twenty embarking for Northern Europe last night on the Swedish motor liner Canada of the Johnson Line. Several Stanford college girls also sailed, as did the family of Prof. J. W. Opful, Stanford lecturer, who will join them at Panama bound for London.

Potential markets for Pacific Coast products in Pernambuco, Brazil, a city of more than 300,000 persons, is emphasized in a letter to exporters by General Steamship Corporation. "There is also an opportunity for sale of manufactured goods, as well as apples, pears, grapes, dried fruit, canned fruits and fish, and such," the letter states. Pernambuco has been included in the itinerary of the new Westfal-Larson ships, direct from here to Brazil, and on to the Argentine.

News of Ships and Sailings at Pacific Ports

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28. (AP)—Internal dissension in the United States Intercoastal Conference has aroused attention among certain shipping interests for eventual regulation of the coast-to-coast trade.

On the Atlantic Coast, shipping men reported, efforts have been started for control of the trade by either the Shipping Board or the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Matson Navigation, American-Hawaiian and Dollar lines all recently announced their intentions of withdrawing from the Intercoastal Conference.

After an illness of three years, Lloyd Harrison, former port engineer for the San Francisco Steamship Company, died at his home in Oakland last night. He was chief engineer of the steamer Alaska during the Klondike rush. He was well known on the Pacific Coast.

Roger D. Lapham, president; John R. Cushing, vice-president, and Walter E. McPherson, traffic manager of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Company, are due here Tuesday from New York to confer with local officials of the line.

SEATTLE, June 28.—The new World-Larsen Line ships in the Pacific Northwest ports of South America trade have launched transatlantic service, the General Steamship Corporation announced here today. That section reports sample cargoes already stored, including canned fruits, fish, condensed milk, flour, lard and lumber.

The sailings in the Pacific Northwest for the new Line will include the Yaka, now coming via Portland, where she will discharge silk.

PORTLAND (Or.), June 28.—Pioneer steamboat men of the West will gather at Astoria on the Columbia River tomorrow for their fifth annual reunion. Chief Arthur Riggs, president of the veterans' organization, expected that 200 persons to attend the reunion. Talks from early steamboating days on Northwest rivers will be simulated.

TACOMA (Wash.), June 28.—The Nippon-Yusen liner West Mahwah arrived here today from Seattle, loaded her cargo of lumber and sailed later in the day for Buenos Aires. The vessel is to return to the Puget Sound to east coast of South America ports.

MEXICAN LAND DECISION MADE

Vacant Acreage in Laguna Region First to Go

MEXICO CITY, June 28. (Exclusive)—In the Laguna region comprising parts of the States of Durango and Coahuila unoccupied lands are to be the only decorations granted by the government, unless there are not enough vacant lands to satisfy all eligible to grants, in which case the expropriated owners are to be reimbursed with real estate elsewhere.

That agreement was reached at a joint meeting of the National Agrarian Commission and the Agricultural Chamber of Commerce of the Laguna district.

A census of the unoccupied lands of the region and of the persons eligible to receive dotations will be made by a commission to be composed of representatives of the National Agrarian Commission and of landowners of the district.

The Laguna district is one of the most important agricultural belts of the republic, its principal products being cotton and wheat. The principal towns in the region are Lerdo, Mapimi, and Gomez Palacio in the State of Durango and Torreon, Matamoros and San Pedro in the State of Coahuila.

ASPHALT FOUND BELOW BORDER

MEXICO CITY, June 28. (Exclusive)—Vast layers of asphalt are reported in the Zacapoaxtla district of the State of Puebla. Samples of the asphalt have been analyzed by the Geological Institute of Mexico and have been pronounced of superior quality. The United States and South America now supply Mexico with the rock.

Until a road from the region has been completed to Zaragoza to make asphalt mining in Puebla profitable the Ministry of Industry, Commerce and Labor will not authorize any concessions for its mining. It is announced. Several American capitalists are reported to have inspected the region recently.

Charter Membership of 400 Men and Women

Survey Alvin W. Wendt First President

Organization of a Hollywood City Club, planned as a civic center for the Hollywood district and to undertake the serious study of all civic problems affecting Hollywood, was announced last week at the club's inaugural forum at the Embassy auditorium.

The Hollywood's City Club has had the assistance and encouragement from similar clubs in Boston, New York, Cleveland and San Francisco in their preliminary plans for affiliation with those clubs will be one of its features. More than seventy-five of Hollywood's leading business men are numbered among the 400 charter members already enrolled.

FORUM SUBJECT

The subject of the inaugural forum was "Hollywood and Civic Responsibility" and the discussion was led by James M. Sheridan, former assistant Attorney-General of the United States and now Vice-consul of Brazil for Southern California. His was followed by Charles H. Fox, Los Angeles candidate for Attorney-General, who gave a brief report of the long list of achievements to the credit of the Commonwealth Club of San Francisco during its twenty-five years of service. He stated the club was founded by the late Benjamin Ide Wheeler and that its present membership exceeds 5000.

OFFICIAL LIST

Alvin W. Wendt, an alumnus of the University of Southern California and Stanford and now an attorney of Hollywood, presided and was announced as the first president of the new club. He introduced the first board of governors, including Victor H. Clarke, secretary of the Hollywood Ritz-Carlton Company; O. H. Plebbe, president of the Hollywood Corporation and former member of the Boston City Club; William S. Holman, general manager of the Metropolitan studios; A. L. Lewis, president Hollywood Secretarial School; Samuel Hoy, vice-president of the Bank of Hollywood, and Mrs. L. B. Curtis, former president of the Hollywood Town Reading Club.

Lloyd Still on Stand in Picture Suit

Harold Lloyd, motion-picture comedian, yesterday resumed the stand in the court of United States District Judge Cosgrave in the suit of Mrs. Sadie S. Witwer, widow of the late H. C. Witwer, author, against the Harold Lloyd Corporation, Harold Lloyd and others. He reviewed his career as a motion-picture actor and director, but denied that he had at any time "pirated" a picture from published stories. Lloyd is expected to be on the witness stand for a few minutes tomorrow.

It is charged by Mrs. Witwer, as executrix of the estate of her late husband, that the film story, "The Freshman," was based on the story, "The Emancipation of Rodney," written by Witwer. Mrs. Witwer is suing, through her attorney, Harold Pendler, for more than $2,000,000, and this claim is being opposed by Robert C. Gortner, Walter N. Seligsberg and Max Felix, attorneys for Lloyd.

Photographs to Go to Art Club

Because of the repairs that must be made to the exhibit room of the Public Library following the recent fire, arrangements were completed yesterday for the transfer of the showing of the All-American Salon of Photography to the California Art Club in Barnsdall Park, Hollywood Boulevard and Vermont avenue. The rehanging of the pictures also necessitates the postponement of the opening date to next Sunday.

The exhibit was assembled under the auspices of the Los Angeles Camera Club. Examples are reproduced on Page 1 of today's issue of The Times Rotogravure section.

NEW TYPE EDUCATION TRIED OUT

Individuality Courses to be Given in Schools When Term Opens in Fall

A course of study that gets away from the idea that education in the public schools can be standardized with pupils turned out like automobiles in a factory, all alike, has been adopted by the Los Angeles County Board of Education and will be inaugurated next fall, according to an announcement yesterday by H. S. Upjohn, County Superintendent of Schools.

The course of study which will be adopted in the schools of Los Angeles county outside of the ten charter cities, was arranged by Mrs. Lorraine Miller Sherer, director of curricula. During the last year experiments were made with the course in several of the schools and proved exceptionally satisfactory, she said.

As outlined by the County Superintendent, the course is teaching in terms of children rather than subjects. Each pupil is studied by the teacher so that he can be treated and instructed as an individual.

"Not only is the new system designed to make better citizens of students by allowing them to develop their own individualities under proper guidance, but it is expected to instill and encourage lifelong habits of study and observation that will help them to meet the problems of life after they have finished their school days," Upjohn declared.

For example: In one of the schools recently a study of life in a Spanish home in California before this State's entry into the Union, was taken up. Each member of the class took part in the actual life of a family in such a home. The whole thing was acted out in costume down to a fiesta. As a result of this study the pupils did a great amount of research work in history, music, spelling, language, art, geography and all the subjects that arose in the course of staging the study.

One of the principal drawbacks to the course at present, the official pointed out, is getting a sufficient number of teachers who are trained for the departure from the old method of group teaching.

Perjury Charge Follows Trial

As an aftermath of the trial of A. P. Luse, local stock broker, recently on trial in Federal court, Mrs. P. L. Battersby, formerly employed by Luse, and a recent witness in his trial, was arrested yesterday by Deputy United States Marshal Lesaner on a charge of perjuring herself during the trial. She was later released on bail.

A search is being made by the deputy marshal for Miss A. R. Thom, also accused, who is reported to have left Luse's office by a side door. In the trial of Luse the jury was out two days and failed to agree.

Entering Central Station, he explained that while searching for a place to buy a drink he met three men who agreed to direct him. Their quest was successful, but Beggs woke up in a vacant lot, beaten and robbed. He gave his address as 935 North Parkman street.

BYRD'S SPONSOR IN NAVY PROUD

Man Who Started Explorer on Career Lives Here

J. H. T. Flaherty Tells of His First Meeting

"Dick" Had Gone on Visit to Philippine Islands

While the plaudits of a nation are being showered on Rear-Admiral Richard E. Byrd, credit for starting him on his career as a sailor and explorer is due in no small part to John H. T. Flaherty, veteran of the United States Navy, who lives at the Nadeau Hotel. It was Flaherty who first suggested to Byrd that he study for entrance to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, a suggestion which he subsequently followed.

"When Byrd was a lad just 12 years of age, he came to Manila, where I was then stationed, to visit a relative, Judge Adam Carson, of the Insular Court of First Instance," Flaherty said yesterday.

"After serving in the Navy during the war with Spain I had been paid off in Hongkong. Later I went to Manila, where I became chief storekeeper for the Insular Coast Guard Service. Our principal storehouse was located on a small island in an estuary of the Pasig River, a place rather difficult to reach, and I was quite surprised when I looked up from my desk one day to see a fine-looking youngster inspecting the place.

MANY QUESTIONS

"When he saw me, he came over to the desk and began asking questions. And I want to tell you he could ask them, too, and every question was backed with intelligence.

"I knew every American boy and girl in Manila in those days, but this lad was a stranger. He told me he was Dick Byrd and that he was from Virginia and paying a visit to Judge Carson. I never learned just how he found his way to our little island, but I do know that from that day a friendship was formed that has been kept up until now.

"It was not long before I realized that young Byrd was genuinely interested in the sea and everything that had to do with ships and sailors. He could not be kept off ships. He went aboard every one of our battleships, cruisers and destroyers at Cavite and Olongapo time and again. He would ask thousands of questions and the officers and men took pride in answering them, so sincere and gentlemanly was the boy. I used to explain to him the machinery in the holds of our small Coast Guard vessels, and time and again I went with him aboard the old barnacle-covered Spanish coastwise and interisland ships that used to tie up along the banks of the Pasig below the Bridge of Spain, where he became a great favorite with the Spanish captains and mates.

SUGGESTION MADE

"One day," Flaherty explained, "I said: 'Dick, you have the sea in your blood, and nothing will ever keep you away from ships, so if I were a youngster like you, I'd study for Annapolis. If you will do this, I've no doubt but that you will pass the examinations and become an officer.'

"Shortly afterward, young Byrd left Manila for a cruise to Europe through the Suez Canal. He entered Annapolis in 1908, I believe, and graduated four years later. The whole world knows what he has accomplished since then; but I claim credit for starting Byrd on his career, and a devilish good job I think I did," the old retired sea dog smilingly concluded.

BYRD PAID HONOR AT NEW YORK LUNCH

NEW YORK, June 28. (AP)—Rear-Admiral Richard E. Byrd returned today from Boston, where yesterday he was given enthusiastic greeting and was honor guest with others of his expedition at a luncheon.

The luncheon was given by Paramount-Publix Corporation to the two cameramen who made the pictorial record of the Antarctic adventure. The photographers, Willard Van Der Veer and Joseph T. Rucker, were seated on the dais with the admiral, but let their pictures do their talking for them.

The admiral gave warm praise to them, pointing out much of their work was done in temperatures of from 50 to 60 deg. below zero.

Tonight the admiral was invited to the dinner given by the New York Press Club for Russell Owen, reporter of the expedition.

TEXAS RAIL LINE MAKES PROGRESS

Santa Fe Speeds Work on Amarillo-Las Animas Right of Way

AMARILLO (Tex.) June 21. (Exclusive)—Rapid progress is being made by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe in obtaining the right of way for its new proposed line that is to run between Amarillo and Las Animas, Colo. More than a dozen construction outfits have already been assembled at points on the division between Amarillo and Boise City, Okla., 122 miles, which will be the first part of the line to be constructed. This 122-mile section will cost more than $5,000,000, according to estimates of engineers. It will involve the building of a bridge on the Canadian River to cost $1,000,000. This structure will be 112 feet high and 1800 feet long. It will be of steel and concrete construction. All details connected with the permanent survey for the entire line between Amarillo and Las Animas have been completed, according to W. H. Rochester of Chicago, construction engineer for the Santa Fe. He said that approximately 1000 men will be given employment when the construction work starts. The bridge over the Canadian River will be completed in nine to twelve months, and the entire line to Las Animas should be finished and placed in operation in about eighteen months, it was stated.

San Diego Girl Wins Contest

ST. LOUIS, June 28. (Exclusive) First award for girls in the St. Louis Essay Contest, sponsored by the Industrial Club of St. Louis and the St. Louis News Service, civic organizations, was won by Miss Elsie Caroline Bell of San Diego, it has been announced here. The contest, in which students wrote on any subject pertaining to St. Louis, was open to all high-school students of St. Louis and St. Louis county, and the two principal awards—one to a boy and one to a girl—provide a scholarship covering freshman tuition in any university the winner chooses to enter.

The 17-year-old daughter of Mrs. Elsie S. Bell, the winner of the girls' group, completed her high-school course early this month at the Principia, widely known Christian Science school in St. Louis. Miss Bell has indicated that she will probably return to St. Louis next fall to enter Principia as a college freshman.

AMERICA LOSES IN TOURIST BALANCE

GENEVA, June 28. (AP)—League of Nations statistics indicate that France, Italy, Canada and Switzerland profit most from tourists. Some countries spend more than they receive from foreign travel, the United States being on the wrong side of the ledger by $614,000,000 in 1928 alone.

JAPAN BEING RUSHED

NANKING, June 28. (Exclusive) Headquarters secretary of the central government has sent a memorandum to the Minister of Foreign Affairs urging pressure on Japan to appoint immediately the Japanese members of the Sino-Nippon joint commission to ascertain and assess damages for injuries suffered by Chinese and Japanese nationals in the troubles of 1928.

NAUTICAL SCHOOL READY

State Secures Ship on Which 160 California Youths Will Learn Navigation

SACRAMENTO, June 29. (AP)—The good ship California State, anchored somewhere on the San Francisco waterfront, is to be the home of about 160 young men from various parts of the State when they assemble to avail themselves of one and two-year courses in navigation.

About next September, says Vierling Kersey, superintendent of public instruction, the ship should be ready to receive the first of its pupils. The California State is to leave the Norfolk Navy Yard about July 1, sail through the Panama Canal in charge of the United States Navy and arrive at San Francisco about the middle of the month.

The nautical school, which the California State is to be, was authorized by the 1929 Legislature. A board of governors, five in number, was appointed by the Governor and this body immediately started to work looking for a suitable ship and arranging courses of study. The vessel selected was donated by the United States Shipping Board, turned over to the Navy for overhauling with State aid, and delivery to San Francisco.

Lieutenant-Commander Emil Topp, U.S.N., retired, has been named as the man likely to become superintendent of the nautical school. The ship will accommodate 160 pupils at a time. Cruises will be included as a part of the training and when the pupils have finished their studies of navigation, seamanship steam, Diesel and electrical engineering and have undergone a course of physical training they should be able to "follow the sea" with sufficient knowledge to give them good ranking, officials of the State school department believe.

An office is to be opened later in the year at the San Francisco ferry building with J. H. Moore of Oakland in charge of registration.

PIONEER TO BE HONORED BY W.C.T.U.

Dry Organization Will Mark Anniversary of Early Worker

EVANSTON (Ill.) June 28. (AP)—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will celebrate, on July 4, the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt of Dorchester, Mass., who first fought liquor with physiology textbooks.

Mrs. Hunt, little known in her generation, was a co-worker of Frances Willard. She died in 1906.

When the W.C.T.U. organized in 1873, part of its program was to educate children against liquor. Mrs. Hunt, an instructor in chemistry, was chosen to organize this work.

She fostered the passage of a law making temperance education compulsory. Such a measure was passed by Congress and later by every State Legislature.

FAKE AMERICAN TRICKS EUROPE

Human Counterfeits Work on Both Sides of Ocean

Berlin Landladies Taken in by German Girl

"Wealthy Grandpa" Dodge Still Working

BERLIN, July 28. (AP)—What the counterfeit count or countess is to America the fake American is to Europe.

Posing as persecuted nobility has opened more than one prosperous America's doors to an impostor; here the lodge is to pose as a prosperous American.

Latest to run afoul of police for pretending to be an unpolished, common, but disgustingly rich visitor from across the Atlantic was a little hairdresser from Mannheim. Her idea was to arrive at a Berlin pension "from America" to study music.

A few days afterward a letter would come from Chicago requesting the landlady to take particularly good care of her guest, as the girl was "the sole heir of her grandfather's fortune of $10,000,000 but must on no account know about it until her education is completed."

Before police stopped her "the girl from America" had completed the education of half a dozen landladies and their friends by taking advantage of their willingness to lend money or extend credit to such an unassuming foreigner.

All the English she knew had been learned during a hairdressing sojourn in England.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY TO TACKLE NEW YORK

NEW YORK, June 28. (Exclusive) The tables have been turned. South America is sending a Christian missionary to New York City.

Called by the Board of American Missions of the United Lutheran Church in America, James Soler, a native Argentinian, will serve as pastor until September of the Spanish-speaking congregation at the Church of the Transfiguration at 74 West One Hundred and Twenty-sixth street in Harlem. Mr. Soler, a candidate for theology at Hamma Divinity School, Springfield, O., is descended from a Lutheran family of long standing in Buenos Aires.

It is expected that Mr. Soler will establish classes in Spanish at the Lutheran Church of the Advent, Seventy-third street and Broadway, as well as at the church in Harlem, in order to interest students in the work of the church in Latin-American countries. The Spanish congregation at the Church of the Transfiguration is composed largely of Lutherans who have come to New York from the West Indies. Rev. L. Caban, former pastor of the church, has returned to the West Indian field.

Walter Keefe Again Elected Chamber Head

MONROVIA, June 28.—New honors were bestowed upon Walter E. Keefe yesterday when he was re-elected president of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the San Gabriel Valley.

Keefe is the second man to be reinstated for a second term of office in the life of the organization. The Associated Chambers of Commerce has been in existence for eighteen years and this is the other officer to serve two terms, the Senator A. J. Evans of this city.

Affairs of the Week
by Juana Neal Levy

Weddings of charming young debutantes as well as wedding anniversaries of brides of fifty years ago, have proved interesting events of the past month, yesterday afternoon a garden reception celebrating the golden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Eli P. Clark, at their lovely home in St. James Park, where were gathered friends, relatives, son, daughters and "in-laws," grandchildren, the hours being from 4 to 6 o'clock.

Mrs. Clark received her guests in a charming frock of beige lace with corsage of orchids, assisted by her daughters, Mrs. Henry Owen Eversole (Daisy Clark,) Mrs. Wilfred Bernard (Katherine Clark,) Miss Lucy Clark and daughter-in-law, Mrs. Eugene Payson Clark.

The marriage of Miss Lucy Sherman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Enoch Sherman of New York to Eli P. Clark was solemnized in Prescott, where she had accompanied her brother, Gen. M. H. Sherman, and met his best friend, Eli P. Clark.

Mr. Clark passed his boyhood in Iowa, where the family had come from Connecticut, and afterwards moved to Missouri, but being ambitious and having a desire to see the West, he left to cross the plains, and joined a group of settlers who were journeying to Arizona. On the way they were menaced by roving Indians and he left the party after shooting a buffalo, settled in Prescott, and being deeply interested in its development, was appointed auditor of the territory by Gen. John C. Fremont.

M. H. Sherman, having been commissioned by the Governor to represent Arizona at the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia in 1876, persuaded his sister to meet him there and afterwards accompany him west. They sailed from New York, and after three days out there was an explosion, and they were picked up by a French steamer and put back to New York, later going west by way of Panama, where they crossed the Isthmus and went by boat to San Francisco and thence south, docking at Santa Monica. They visited the little city of Los Angeles and on to Indio, where a stage coach was waiting to take them over the mountains to Prescott, where they were greeted by Eli P. Clark and the romance began, which ended in the wedding June 28, 1880.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark have three daughters and one son, six grandchildren, John and Betty Barnard, Malcolm and Henry Owen Eversole, Jr., and Patsy and Joan Clark.

Younger Complexions For Older Faces

Get rid of that blemished, aged complexion and bring out the young, beautiful skin beneath by using pure Mercolized Wax. In just a few days the surface skin is gently flecked off in tiny, invisible particles, clearing away all such blemishes as freckles, tan, sallowness, blackheads and dry flaky skin. The lovely smooth under skin is then revealed. It is beautifully clear, soft and velvety and your entire face looks and feels years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty. Quickly reduce wrinkles and eyelines by briskly patting the face each day with this tingling skin-toning astringent; 1 ounce Powdered Saxolite dissolved in 1 half pint witch hazel. Miss E. Ivanovo (left) appeared in a song group number on the program presented for the Friday Morning Club at its last meeting of the season. The program was promoted and directed by Dr. Sonia Poushkareff, pictured at the right.

CLUB GIVES LAST PROGRAM

Dr. Sonia Poushkareff Presents Divertissement for Friday Morning Organization

The climax of a year of surpassingly fine programs for the Friday Morning Club was attained Friday when Dr. Sonia Poushkareff presented an all-Russian divertissement for the second time before this discriminating group of women.

Dr. Poushkareff is a member of the club and a great favorite, having won many friends through her striking personality and beauty and also for the fact that she has energetically espoused the cause of promoting talent of a high order among her countrymen and women who are in Hollywood. She was the vivacious and entertaining mistress of ceremonies. She presented artists, who formerly appeared in the royal opera and ballet in Petrograd, with an intimate note.

The beautiful costuming, representing a bit of Russia, was designed by Dr. Sonia.

Those who appeared on the program were Messrs. A. Borissoff, Y. Borovsky and S. Molavsky in a musical trio of stringed instruments; Mme. Ivanova, prima donna; Miss Vera Stelska, prima ballerina; M. Gramakowsky, baritone, and other dancers—Robert Bell, M. Archansky and La Petite Polonska. Each one received an ovation from the enthusiastic audience and as many encores were given as the time would permit.

Mrs. John C. Urquhart was installed as first vice-president. The new board and the old were presented by Mrs. Sarah Bixby Smith, who retains the chair of chief executive for another year.

A lecture recital of humor and philosophy in music was given by Mrs. Guy Bush for the after-luncheon program, which was divided in three parts: Children's songs, pianologues and Negro spirituals. Almost one-half of the numbers were original with Mrs. Bush.

Golden West Women Give Race Program

California Women of the Golden West closed their season Friday by presenting a race betterment program before a large audience in the Ambassador Hotel Theater.

Mrs. Jane W. Pitshugh of the executive board of Mothers' Educational Center, and Robert A. McKibben of All Nations Foundation, were the speakers who appeared in the absence of Dr. Maude Wilde, chairman for the afternoon.

The afternoon closed with Christopher Morley's one-act play, "The Rehearsal," under the direction of Miss Selma Paley, chairman of drama. In the cast were: Miss Betty Gage, Miss Marie Othmer, Miss Winifred Schell, Miss Eileen Burdette, Miss Estelle Rueland and Miss Janice Penney.

Society of Cinemaland

by Myra Nye

Vacation season has visited the members of the film colony. The lure of the mountains and the seashore is upon all of them. But increased activity comes to the work-a-day world of the cinema capital during the summer months as it often does in other centers and many of the film folk must find an outlet at home for the recreation spirit.

Summertime brings to Hollywood an increase in the social activities of its many popular clubs. Prominent among these is the Dominoes, recently formed as a replica of the Twelfth Nighters of New York. This organization of prominent women in film world has a playtime calendar for the summer months which includes a series of delightful supper dances with entertainment provided by its members.

The first of these entertainments which occurred last evening at the clubhouse on North Sycamore met with gratifying success. More than 200 guests attended the affair which was held in the dining-room on the second floor of the club home. The tables were gayly decorated with spring flowers and balloons of various shades and an excellent orchestra—partially hidden on the balcony—provided the music for the dancing and entertainment.

Adele Rowland was mistress of ceremonies, introducing in her inimitable manner the various numbers which were given by Irene Delroy, Ines Courtney, Carmel Myers, Patsy Ruth Miller, Mary Lawler, Marjorie White, Norma Drew, Jean Kent Armstrong, Bernice Elliot and Ann Rork. Mrs. James Gleason is president of the club and Mary Forbes was in charge of the entertainment.

Honors Sister

One of the attractive affairs of recent date which was held outside of Hollywood's club life was the buffet supper given by Mr. and Mrs. Monte Blue in their Beverly Hills home in honor of Mrs. Blue's young sister, Miss Salma Janson, who was graduated Thursday evening from Hollywood High School with high honors. The affair was given following the graduation exercises.

Miss Janson, who is the daughter absent on his honeymoon with Bebe Daniels, was the only principal member of the cast of the production who did not attend.

Among hosts and guests at the affair were Messrs. and Mmes. Jack Dempsey (Estelle Taylor,) Monte Blue, Mervyn Le Roy (Edna Murphy,) Jack White, William Wellman, Grant Withers (Loretta Young,) Johnny Hamp, Misses Dorothy Lee, Merna Kennedy, Rose Perfect and Rose Doner, Messrs. Monta Bell, Maurice De Mond, Mack Sennett, Gene Parker, Josef von Sternberg, Roscoe Arbuckle, Joe Frisco and others.

Alaskan Trip

Mr. and Mrs. John Barrymore (Dolores Costello,) have planned a delightful vacation trip aboard their new yacht. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cawthorne will motor to Vancouver, B. C., where they will join the Barrymores on a fishing trip which will ultimately take the party to Alaskan waters.

Dinner-Dance

A novel party was given Wednesday evening at the Volga Boat in Venice when Renee Torres and Grace Simpson were hostesses to a party of friends including. Mr. and Mrs. Finis Fox, Mr. and Mrs. George Lewis, Ona Brown, Pearl Dannenberg, Mr. and Mrs. William Keefe, Betty Boyd, Doris Arbuckle, Rosa Roma, Ona Wilson, Pauline Bowdoin, Nancy Dover, Fay Webb, Lina Basquette, Lane Chandler, George Cowan, Rex Bell, Harvey Barnes, William Gill and many others. A wierd effect was created in the ballroom of the night club with the use of soft lights, velvet drapes, velvet cushions and the low tables on which the dinner was served.

Midsummer Jubilee

Mrs. Ralph Blum (Carmel Myers) is chairman of the patroness committee for the forthcoming Hollywood midsummer jubilee to be staged at the Bowl July 2 for the benefit of the Los Angeles Sanatorium at Duarte. Among the actresses who have assisted in the ticket sale during the past week were Anita Page, Gwen Lee, Betty Boyd, Betty Bronson, Dorothy McNulty and Sally Blane.

Beach Club Function

An attractive luncheon party was given at the Sea Breeze Beach Club by Mrs. William Keefe, honoring Mrs. Alexander Haynes Levy. Among the guests were Mrs. Emma Wilson, Mrs. Finis Fox, Ona Brown, Mrs. J. Ward Cohen (Jaqueline Saunders,) Mrs. Ernest Westmore (Ethlyn Clair,) Betty Boyd, Charlotte Merriam, Ona Wilson, Grace Simpson and Renee Torres.

The New in Stores & Homes

Novelties, Ideas, and Suggestions

By OLIVE GRAY

Vacation clothes: They form an important part of your recreation. In order that one may properly enjoy the relaxation of rest time, the mind should be free from care as to dress. Time expended, beforehand, in obtaining the right garments for the occasion is time well employed. Whether the free period is to be at the beach, mountain; on a journey by land or sea; the knowledge that one's wardrobe is appropriate for the occasion confers a major part of vacation benefit. To wish one had taken along this; to regret the oversight of that—distracts greatly from true relaxation—spoils much of the fun. For, the mind as well as the body, should be free, for genuine rest and recreation in the highest sense.

Days With Glass

With the present-day vogue for glass, one well may take a hint from the way of displaying colored glasses, in that great furniture store. There, glass shelves set in windows between certain sections of the store, serve to offset the various ornamental glass objects. Such shelves placed in clear glass windows of a home, would prove equally ornamental. In fact, many who own collections of fine glass have habitually thus displayed these objects of artistic.

While all may not own gems in the way of antique glass, it should be remembered that once in history the prised antique treasures were new, and many creations of today will, in time, become antique and of great worth; for true artistry is as true when modern as when of olden days. In other words, as "thing of beauty is a joy forever," whether the product of yesterday or of today.

Glass Cups and Saucers

Among the objects useful as well as dainty, are cups and saucers of glass in modish colors. The shapes are excellent, the colors such as match or "go well" with modern table wares, and these cups either singly—or rather doubly—or in sets, form excellent gifts.

Vacation Beauty

A great beauty specialist advises that we take along on vacation plenty of creams, lotions and hair rejuvenators, and that we use the time for adding to, rather than subtracting from, the loveliness of complexion and hair. Also, this authoress warns against getting sunburned and above all protests against allowing the figure to acquire adipose tissue, through wrong foods. In other words, when you relax for vacation, work harder than ever at becoming and remaining beautiful!

A Contrast

It may be to laugh at one girl's version of vacationing, in view of all this beauty advice.

"The first few days," said she, "I mean to banish cold creams and lotions and all the tiresome doings of regulation life! I may not even wash my face, for twenty-four hours!"

Perhaps this is what our psychologic friends might term a "beauty complex"—or should we say rather a complexion?

Too Sleepy?

Thomas Edison once declared, in interview with a celebrated woman reporter, that women sleep too much for beauty. "Not more than six hours sleep, to keep beauty," was the great inventor's dictum. Revolutionary, in view of countless admonishment anent beauty sleep." And, not so scientific, in view of recent discoveries as to sleep-requirement in different individuals?

Notes in Words

That Fashion rules, even in the realm of language, cannot be denied. Not only are certain words taboo during certain periods, but many considered vulgar at one time, are thought proper, at others. Within these limits, also, there are certain refinements in words, recognised by the ultra particular; but even such distinctions are often uprooted by the whim of Mme. La Mode.

Not long ago—almost yesterday, in fact—certain adjectives applied to clothes were sure to have a mannish tang. But, with the advent of the so-called "feminine vogue," which is to match the frilly-furbelowed of the clothes made, have returned to favor.

A few seasons past, it was distinctly de mode to be pretty; but now it must be distinctly smart. Pretty now is gaining favor, and a touch of pink-and-bluesness has returned to sartorial language — a pinkness and a baby-bluish, fitted to the pokish bonnet and bouncy frock.

Shopping

Have you ever paused to think how much the handsome package is for us, in the way of gifting? The most commonplace of articles, daintily put up, sealed as if very precious and thus presenting a gift-appearance, gains forthwith. Even though, possibly, we care more for such a package than for the actual value of its contents? The accommodation, the giftiness, the with the additional money and may prove a saving to the

From China

Of singular fascination are those gifts from China, which—fashioned from soapstone—present articles of value far beyond the cost. Book trays, quaint and grotesque, as well as lovely, pieces are found in local Chinese stores; all or any giftworthy.

RESORT AND HOTEL NOTES

Guests of Tamarack Lodge in the Mammoth Lakes district of the high Sierras enjoyed the first Saturday evening dance of the season on the 21st inst. The next evening W. R. Jackson of Pasadena entertained at the lodge with a series of motion pictures taken on his frequent fishing trips in the Mammoth Lakes region, featuring the wild life of the mountains. On the 25th inst., Miss Leota Wood, violinist and director of programs at the lodge, and Miss Myrtis Gardner, pianist, gave an evening of violin and piano numbers.

Every accommodation for the angling-minded vacationist is offered by the Morris pleasure fishing boats of Santa Monica, it is declared by Capt. Jack Dugan. The company operates the live-bait boats Palisades and Morris Owl, the former running on an all-day trip each day and the latter on a twice-a-day run. The company also operates the charter boats W. K. and Lark, and the Challenger barge.

Deep-sea fishing off Santa Monica has been splendid for more than a month. On the Challenger barge accommodations for anglers wishing to stay overnight are available. The Morris fleet has been inspected and passed by the United States Steamboat Inspection Service and the pilots, all veterans, are licensed and inspected by the United States service.

Twenty-nine Palms Inn, the well-known hostelry located on the Colorado Desert at Twenty-nine Palms, fifty miles east of Banning, announces that they are closing for the summer. Extensive improvements are to be made and the entire resort is to be thoroughly renovated.

The hotel will reopen some time in September.

The construction of practical miniature airplanes equipped with electric lights will be one of the outstanding features of the educational work at the Black-Foxe Boys' Camp to be held at Lake Elsinore for two months beginning Monday, according to Maj. Earle A. Foxe, president of the Black-Foxe Military Institute.

Terminating months of labor, officials of the Big Bear Investment Corporation, builders of Moonridge Bowl at Moonridge Mountain Estates in the Big Bear Valley, yesterday announced completion of their huge undertaking. This gives to Southern California one of her largest and most beautiful outdoor bowls.

The bowls will be the site for the presentation of the elaborate pageant play, "Nevertheless Old Glory," to be held July 4, 5 and 6 of each year under the direction of Phil Whitting, director of the Ramona pageant.

Cottage City at Laguna Beach is conveniently located, only a stone's throw from the ocean, on the main street, and only a block from the principal corner. Numerous cottages, completely equipped for housekeeping and accommodating from one to six people, are available.

Situated on the beautiful Santa Ana River, just south of Big Bear Lake, Seven Oaks has for more than forty years been famous for its hospitality and recreational advantages. The camp itself is extremely attractive and its comfortable log and frame cabins are equipped either for housekeeping or American-plan accommodations.

Hotel Alessandro is found in the heart of Ramonaland at Hemet. Its picturesqueness is due to the motif furnished by the Hopi Indian art. There are sixty rooms with private baths, a spacious lobby, dining and banquet rooms, coffee shop and other innovations which offer a most delightful place to spend a week-end of rest.

HOLLYWOOD BOWL breakfasts become more and more stylish, more than 250 there last week, with councilmanic and numerous other guests of honor sitting in imposing array at that long table on the hill above the rest of us. Lady guests have to be particular about shoes and stockings sitting at this table.

Glen Tindell, the new manager, made a good impression . . . even, I mean, if, when wishing to start the program before all had finished breakfast, he pleaded anxiously, "Now if only you can eat quietly . . . !" And with half the Blue Book there, too.

Robert Noble, who presided as chairman of the day, and believes in a moron nation, did very well, including all Mrs. Artie Carter's pet adjectives. As the various notables were called upon to rise and bow there was much evidence of hasty swallowing mouthfuls of pie, which had just been served. Yes, it's a pie breakfast.

Prominent amongst lady Bowl boosters are Mrs. Charles Henry Thompson, whose committee comprises the creme de la creme of socially stylish matrons; Mrs. Elisabeth Holbrook, who ropes in the city politicians and was responsible for having all the Councilmen there; Mrs. J. W. Mable of musical distinction, Mrs. Harry Culver, Daisy Bannerman Coates, Myra Belle Miller, Mrs. Arthur Wright and Grandma Wakeman. Celeste Rynus made the nice, flowery opening inspiration talk, in which everybody and everything was "just wonderful" and Hazel Hayes cut the biggest sartorial dash in a large Emma Hamilton hat. Dr. Clinton Wonder of the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences made a nice international harmony address on "The Mass Production Charm of Great Music" and told the jolly old story about the lady caught in a sudden silence at a symphony concert, saying "I fry mine in oil." In England the lady always said "I use a teaspoonful for each person and one for the pot."

President Sanborn of the Council had his nice daughter along. He's a good fellow, even if he does say "You wimmin and folks connected with the Bowl . . ." And he told us of "dealing with propositions that don't make pleasant noises."

All the same, it was really Grandma Wakeman's morning. She had a table full of guests, easily the jolliest table there. She is 93 years of age, and tells us she has it all arranged to be cremated, as she wants to make sure of having a new outfit in heaven. She makes life and death both sound so pleasant. Everyone trots up to snatch a talk with this highly lovable grandma. And she always reproves us . . . for fear we are making her too vain.

A clever girl who fills an interesting job is Janet McNiell, who is responsible for the Azuride bulletin on the Los Angeles Railway cars. She has published it for five years now . . . and made friends galore for the company. She has one of those charming voices that make words sound so alluring.

Hugh Matier, geologist, has just received a remarkable old grandfather's clock from his home in Ireland. His illustrious grandparent was Clerk of the Crown in the little kingdom of Mourne. Clock-making was a hobby and he made seven, which have since become priceless. This particular one was made for the Rev. McKee of Rathfriland, great friend of the Brontes, and he was the first to read the MSS of "Jane Eyre." Grandpa did not make any clocks for his own family, however, so Hugh's mother bought this one for him. It cost $4.26 to get it all the way from a remote Irish village to Port Los Angeles, via New York and the Panama Canal. Then it cost twice that to get it to Manhattan Beach from San Pedro! These old clocks were also the family safe, where deeds, marriage licenses, birth certificates were stored . . . not against theft, which was unknown, but just so they would all be in one place.

Visiting travelers are Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Bailey and small daughter Carol from Arkansaw. Mrs. Bailey is the daughter of Mrs. Charles Hite, who, in turn, is Estelle Lawton Lindsay's sister. All of which leads up to the fact that Mrs. Bailey was wearing a stunning suit which attracted all eyes, and positively declares she bought it in Arkansaw! I mean, there is nothing to surpass it in Hollywood or Paris.

The squabble in the Daughters of the British Empire here, is really a tussle between Dr. Smyley, out here from the East to help put over the home for the aged for the organization, and Mrs. Morrison, State regent. It looks like a crisis. The outlook at present, since several chapters have resigned in favor of the Morrison attitude, is that the whole organization in California will be reconstructed under a different name. Like the British Empire, the British Daughters are very loosely held together. The national federation has practically no control over State federations.

But, as a war usually proves a tonic to the Empire, so this local fight may prove a tonic for the Daughters. They have been drifting along for years in "the canbers of a long peace."

Mrs. Vernon Steele, wife of the English actor who has adopted a southern drawl and a gentlemanly drunk so handsomely in "Under a Virginia Moon," is incredibly petite. She looks about 14 years of age, yet she is the mother of two boys, 4 years and 1 month of age, respectively. She is a most attractive little person, with a ready wit, and obviously adores her six-foot spouse. It is always becoming for a wife to adore her husband.

HONORED AT LUNCHEON

Mrs. E. E. Brostrom, retiring president of the Los Angeles Washington-street School Parent-Teacher Association, was the honoree at a farewell luncheon given Wednesday by members of the club in the galeria of the Sea Breeze Beach Club.

Sunday School Lesson

"The International Sunday School Lesson for July 6 is "Abraham: A Pioneer of Faith."—Genesis xii:1-5; xiii:1-12; xvii:1-13; xviii:22-23; Hebrews xi:8-10.

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

Critics should not be so cocksure. Time has a way of making a joke out of wiseacres. No real scholar will permit himself to be found in the company of the wordy crew who utter infallible opinions. For the unfolding years bring confusion upon these self-complacent oracles who deliver final judgments upon heaven and earth, and the waters under the earth. Nothing more clearly demonstrates the essentially unscholarly character of our noisy modern than their absurd air of finality. A good text for timid souls to ponder, when troubled by the upsetting deliverances of these new instances of "infallibility in breeches" is, "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh."

Our case in point is Abraham, first in a series of six months' studies of representative men and women of the Bible whom the Sunday-school millions will consider. Only a few years ago the very wise critics were pooh-poohing the historicity of this great Bible character. He was termed a timeless figure of fable, a legendary hero from the mists of the beginning of time, originating in some vague and unknown region of the nebulous Orient, called "Ur of the Chaldees." Myriads of men and women, not yet old, were taught that there was no evidence of the actual existence of Abraham; or of the localities and personalities associated with his name.

SPADE VERSUS CONJECTURE

Nowadays, though, the person is an ignoramus who is not aware of the general results of recent archeological research in Bible lands. More important than the finding of Tut-Ankh-Amen's tomb are the discoveries recently made at Ur of the Chaldees, Abraham's home town, by Maj. Leonard C. Woolley, in behalf of the British Museum and of the University of Pennsylvania Museum. Written history extending two thousand years beyond Abraham has been unearthed, with clear evidence of organized civilization stretching still further back, by unknown millenniums.

Smashed in confusion are the reasonings and conjectures of critics who airily discredited the story of Abraham. Anybody who seeks adventure may follow, as I myself have done, the entire route of Abraham's pioneering. I have looked upon the still-standing walls, in the ancient city of Ur, of the very pagan temples from which Abraham and his father revolted. The geography of the Bible narrative vindicates its accuracy. I own deciphered records from Abraham's birthplace that were written by men of his own day, and earlier.

EVIDENCE IN PHILADELPHIA

It is worth a visit to Philadelphia, from the remotest corner of the continent, in order to study the beautiful and awesome collection of relics from Ur of the Chaldees now on exhibition in the great museum of the University of Pennsylvania. All the glamour of unreality is stripped from Abraham's day by these abundant records.

In points small and great, the accuracy of the Bible's biography of Abraham is shown by a personal visit to the scenes where he dwelt. What commentator would see anything significant in such a passage as Genesis 24:16, wherein it said that Rebecca "went down to the fountain and filled her pitcher, and came up"? When I traveled in Haran I found that the wells are deep, and that the water is reached by long stairways cut in the rock. Even in such trifles the truth of the Scripture story is made plain. It is easier to trace the footsteps of Abraham four thousand years ago than the journeys of the Jesuit missionaries in Canada only three hundred years distant.

A KING AND AN EXILE

Judging by contemporary standards, there were many greater men than Abraham. King Hammurabal, for instance, about whom we have learned at all only in late years, was a mighty law-giver and ruler; but how he pales, as a historic figure of abiding influence, when contrasted with the "father of the faithful," the great "come-outer," Abraham!

Stories of Abraham still persist along the route of his great trek. At Urfa, in Haran, the natives still recount this tale: In the long ago, Abraham dwelt in their city. But he had heard a Voice, and planned to emigrate to Canaan. Because he was a good and beneficent man, the people pleaded with him to remain, and become their king. He refused; they urged. Resolute, they took him to the peak of the mountain which overtops Urfa, and declared that he must remain, living or dead; for if he persisted in leaving they would cast him down to his death. Unmoved, Abraham insisted that he must obey the Voice. So they cast him down from the dizzy height—and where he landed, unhurt, two great springs broke forth under his feet. If you don't believe the story, there are the two sacred springs or pools, to this day; full of tame and sacred fish, which—as I can attest—crowd one another out of the water as they throng to be fed.

Aleppo, the ancient key city at the head of Syria, enshrines Abraham's memory. The name in Arabic is "Halep," which means "cow;" because, tradition says, good Father Abraham, when he dwelt there, en route to Canaan, used to milk a white cow at the city's gate every evening for the benefit of the hungry. Such stories cling to all the regions of Abraham's life in a way that is not so of any of the great world-ruling kings who once held sway over the same territory.

WITH FEET OF CLAY

It is a bit surprising that, during the recent vogue of "debunking" biographies, none of the gutter guild put out a book on Abraham. For he was not perfect. He stumbled again and again, especially in the matter of passing off his wife as his sister, when he was in a blue funk down in Egypt.

But there is more to the sun than sun-spots; more to Cromwell than the wart on his nose; more to Washington than his occasional lusty profanity; more to Lincoln than his gawkiness and rough stories. In its essence and in its totality, the life of Abraham was great—great in fortitude, great in initiative, great in hospitality, great in optimism, great in magnanimity, great in loyalty; but greatest of all in faith.

"BIG HOUSE" DISPELS FEARS

Uneasy Studio Officials Relieved by Reception Given Strictly He-Man Picture

BY ELENA BOLAND

Dispelling fears from many professional minds, "The Big House" opened Wednesday to break the Criterion box-office record set by "The Divorcee" on its first day. This relieved more than one uneasy official who doubted that a "he-man" picture would draw crowds which, as is well known, are composed primarily of women.

To George Hill, whose idea the story is and whose direction knit it together, this audience reaction meant more than a personal satisfaction. It meant that he can continue to turn out "he-man" entertainment, the only type for which he feels himself suited.

Besides an uncertainty as to feminine interest, other angles about "The Big House" brought consistent worry to Hill.

"A picture of this sort is classed as propaganda, exposing truthfully, as it does, the ineffectualness of the prison system in America. The really ghastly side cannot, of course, be shown, but we have brought out the extant conditions of overcrowding, poor nourishment and the terrible idleness imposed on so many convicts. In daring this, one's first thought was naturally of the censors. The picture was held up for a while in New York, but finally passed as teaching a strong moral lesson. This lesson is two-sided; it strikes the municipalities which fail to sufficiently support their jails, and it attempts to show youth exactly how unpleasant a prison sentence can be. Personally, I would like to have this film shown in all the schools of the country."

As D. W. Griffith's camera man, George Hill started his motion-picture activities in 1908. His interest, he says, has always been in the mud and the people it produces. Sophistication and drawing rooms are beyond him.

"If I had to set up my camera in a drawing room, I wouldn't know what to do with it," he shrugged helplessly. "Give me a battleship or an airplane and I can try something."

Since the M.-G.-M. studio has so far given Hill his way in choosing realism from his own sources, he cannot even imagine the day when he will be content to retire from movie making, a game which excites him afresh every day. In order not to waste time or energy, he has all his films of the immediate future planned and in succession. The first, and one he is working on, is "Dark Star," taken from the book by Lorna Moon and teaming Marie Dressler and Wallace Beery. The scene places Hill in his element; the dark waterfronts, alley ways and strange, aimless wanderers.

FILM CENTER CHANGE STRESSED

German Screen Impresario Discusses Ambitious Plans for Picture Production Abroad and Finds Much Has Happened to Hollywood in Six Years

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT

HOW much has happened in Hollywood in six years? It would scarcely be possible to measure the march of events that has taken place in the film center, but Curtis Melnitz, impresario of the Terra Films, Inc., of Germany, who returned here for the first time since 1924, gave an impression of the change. Six years ago he was a resident here, connected with the United Artists Studio, and after leaving, assumed charge of distribution for that concern in fields abroad.

Melnitz declared that he felt like a stranger in a strange land. "I know scarcely anybody any more in the pictures," he said. "It is an entirely new population in the film colony, and a wholly different Hollywood. The boulevard is utterly transformed. There was only one high building of any pretentions as I remember it on my last visit, and now they dot the thoroughfare. The Chinese Theater has replaced the Egyptian as the objective of tourists and pictureqoers bent on seeing the great premieres. People have moved hither, yon and

MEMORIAL TO BE UNVEILED

Central Figure

Detail of fountain to be unveiled tomorrow.

Tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 opens the fete which is to conclude with the unveiling of Ebell Club's Fountain of Honor, sculptural achievement of Henry Lion, young Los Angeles artist.

The project of a fitting memorial to service men has been alive in the club since the end of the World War. Original plans called for the completion of a fountain by Julia Bracken Wendt, noted sculptress, who was compelled, however, due to her own and her famous painter-husband's health, to relinquish the commission.

Then Lion was commissioned and he conceived a graceful female figure bearing Old Glory in the left hand, the folds partially draping the body, and holding up the lamp of learning in the right. Especially charming is the gravely beautiful young head, symbol of the finest type of young American womanhood. Our photo shows the figure before the flag was placed in the left hand.

Henry Lion was born in Fresno in 1900, his talent appeared there and was developed in Los Angeles at the Otis Art Institute, also under S. Macdonald-Wright and later in New York City. He is well known in Los Angeles for his fountain figure in the lounge of the Carthay Circle Theater, the outdoor fountain figure before the theater depicting "The Spirit of '49" and the heroic head of De Anza, also in the theater's garden.

Besides these Mr. Lion modeled the historical bronze doors of the Los Angeles City Hall and has executed numerous private portraits and other sculptural commissions.

The figure will occupy a pedestal in the center of the polygonal fountain in the large patio of the club and by its grace and appropriateness will be one of the city's most attractive pieces of outdoor sculpture.

SHE ONCE "NOED" DE MILLE

Wynne Gibson Who Walked Out on Director About to Blossom Forth as "Molly Magdalene"

BY MURIEL BABCOCK

When Wynne Gibson walked out of the cast of "Madame Satan" on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot, some one dubbed her "the girl who said 'no' to Cecil B. De Mille."

Miss Gibson, now about to blossom forth as "Molly Magdalene" in Crane Wilbur's play of that name at the Mayan, beginning tomorrow, explained, a little ruefully, her action.

SO SHE WALKED OUT

"I didn't think I was cast right. I was playing a heavy to Kay Johnson's lead. I'm so small and Kay is pretty tall. I told Mr. De Mille that the part wasn't a good one for me, that I wasn't suited to it. He didn't agree. So, I did just what I would do if I were cast in a stage play I didn't like. I said I wouldn't play the role. I walked out.

"It seems it is the unpardonable thing to walk out on a picture role, especially one for which Cecil B. De Mille picks you. And—I did have a five-year contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, but as a result of my action, I haven't now. I'm really sorry. I didn't mean to do anything wrong."

Tiny, piquant, but not pert, Wynne Gibson looks anything but a young woman who would hurl a "deff" in a motion-picture producer's face.

COMEDY COMEDIENNE

A good many Los Angeles playgoers will remember her as the comedienne in "Castles in the Air," the musical comedy which was seen at El Capitan Theater in the fall of 1926 and which did six months' business (at that time a record) up and down the Coast. Last year she was in "Jarnegan" with Richard Bennett in New York.

She has a small part in "The Fall Guy," the Jack Mulhall picture at the R.-K.-O. this week. It was her first picture role. She followed it with quite an important part in "Children of Pleasure" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and with it won the contract which she promptly lost.

Crane Wilbur, author of "Molly Magdalene," wrote the scenario of "Children of Pleasure." That's one reason why she's in this show. Another is that Al Rosen, who is producing it, is her Hollywood agent.

PROLOGUE OUT IN FRONT AGAIN

Potpourri Show Revived to Enliven Film Offerings

Strict Canned Entertainment Held Not Quite Enough

Customers Welcome Seen for Flesh-and-Blood Revue

BY PHILIP K. SCHEUER

An America not quite mechanized is crying for its pound of flesh. Canned entertainment, the days are proving, is not enough. Back come the masters of stage spectacle, the entrepreneurs of extravaganza, the Rotarians of the revue—back they come; though in cold, sober fact they were never away. Sid Grauman is already flourishing twice daily at what was once his Chinese Theater, Larry Ceballos, the boy with the girls with the serpentine hips, is as good as installed at the two Warner de luxe houses here; Fanchon and Marco have more new "Ideas" than a compiler of dictionaries, and Paramount Publix, they say, are on the verge of impounding whole troops for yoeman service in the theaters.

Sid Grauman, who is going on tour with "Hell's Angels," the air spectacle now at the Chinese, says that it all depends on what other cities want, as far as "prologues" go. Because his name is indelibly associated locally with these three-dimensional potpourris, he had to have one to go with it when he took over the exploitation of the air picture. A revue like his current one, he figures, costs anywhere from $2000 to $7000 weekly upkeep. But Fox West Coast is standing that expense, because people expect their "money's worth" at a $2 house.

SCREEN DISAPPOINTS

Larry Ceballos, frankly disappointed with the result of attempts to bring his style of entertainment to the screen, will stage his first new show at Warner's Hollywood on July 4. This will be known as Unit No. 1. After two weeks Unit No. 1 will move downtown to the other Warner establishment for another two weeks, Unit No. 2 replacing it in Hollywood. Meanwhile, Unit No. 3 will be in rehearsal, ready to step in when Unit No. 2 leaves Hollywood for the city. In this way an endless chain will be created.

Each link will be made up of an orchestra of twenty, a chorus of twenty-four girls and twelve boys. The choruses will be recruited from the ranks under contract at Warner's and First National studios, both studios having awakened to the impracticability of doing anything really effective at present on the screen with "line" numbers.

OTHER REASONS CITED

There are probably other reasons as well. Call them economic, the passing of the "novelty" of talkies, or, again, the cry for flesh and blood. No one will deny, certainly, the existence of a revolution in the amusement world nor question its staggering cost to the industry. The end is not yet in sight, but the signs are encouraging. For, if those who guide the destiny of the theater are sometimes a trifle arbitrary in telling the public what it wants they are as ready in their turn to be told if they are wrong. The show business, counting time out for experiment, is still largely a gamble—and nobody knows this better than show folk.

With regard to the Publix theaters, no official information is yet forthcoming. There is a strong possibility that this organization will follow the example set by Fanchon and Marco, assembling unit stage shows on the Coast and routing them through the West. And R.-K.-O., at present receiving acts from the East, reports increasing bookings all along the line. Vaudeville, or whatever you want to call it, is taking a new lease on life.

"GREEN PASTURES" DENIED GREEN CRITIC

BY PERCY HAMMOND

NEW YORK, June 28. (Exclusive) Yesterday I was summoned from spraying, weeding and mulching my temporal flower beds at Aunt Phoebe's by a call to the telephone. A soft magnolia voice informed me that the owner, a southern lady, was in New York with her nephew, 16 years of age, and was planning to take him to a show. "He is," said she, "studying journalism in his college and wishes to specialize in criticism of the drama. I have read your articles in the Dallas News and I know that you can guide me to a play suitable to a boy of clean mind and no experience. Something worth while and not vulgar."

"GREEN PASTURES?" BAH!

Dedicated as I am to public service I immediately set my brains to work. "Hold the wire for a minute," said I, "and I will tell you where to go." Not to "Lysistrata," I reflected. Nor to "Flying High," "Stepping Sisters," "Apron Strings," "Strictly Dishonorable," "Young Sinners," "Lost Sheep," "Artists and Models," or the "Carrick Gayeties."

All of these, I thought, are unfitted in a crisis of the kind. They will abash sheltered drama lovers from Dixieland for their forward exhibitions replete with passion, lust, nudity and misbehavior.

"The place to take your nephew," I said, "is 'The Green Pastures.' Made of material from Holy Writ, a simplification of the Scriptures, it is cleaner than a Gideon Bible. Also it is a masterpiece of courageous drama, extending the petty limits of the stage to refreshing and hitherto undiscovered territory. It is just the place," I added, "to take a burgeoning drama critic aged 16."

The musical drawl of my inquirer at once changed to a snarl. "'The Green Pastures,'" said she, "is a Nigger show and we are from Texas. I won't ask you again for advice." What is a bureau of inquiry to do when its questions are so hard to answer? A drama reviewer's only friend is his Remington, and sometimes even it is hostile to his comfort.

The British censor frowns upon "The Green Pastures" and prevents its performance in London on the grounds that it blasphemes the Holy Book of Genesis. That action is from a race that laughed contemptuously at the Tennessee mountaineers when they penalized an American school-teacher for suggesting to his pupils that there are flaws in the story of creation.

The British, however, are not always as superstitious as their prohibition of "The Green Pastures" would indicate. They are now shouting hosannas to Paul Robeson, a glorious American negro, for his characterization of a bewildered colored man married to a white woman in Shakespeare's "Othello." There has been some discussion among Britain's drama lovers about the esthetic propriety of the kisses which Mr. Robeson bestows upon a Caucasian Desdemona performed by one of Great Britain's most exclusive actresses. That small deviation from "life's alterable rules" is not seriously regarded in England. The only thing the motherland's critics object to is that Mr. Robeson, reverting from Shakespeare to Dixieland, pronounces it "survice" instead of "service."

REINHARDT IN LUXURY

One of my aspirations is that I and the drama will last long enough for me to hear Mr. Robeson's cathedral voice lifted in the pipe organ speeches of Shakespeare's "Othello."

Alexander Woollcott, writing from Salzburg to the New Yorker, describes the luxury in which Max Reinhardt lives in his castle, the Schloss Leopoldskron. There, surrounded by Alps and actors, Herr Reinhardt, Europe's Belasco, plans. Rich, comfortable and esthetic, he sits in his tower dreaming of novel and salable delights. "Together," writes Mr. Woollcott, "we ambled through the castle park encircled now by a stone wall built by the profits of 'The Miracle.'"

Mr. Woollcott's word picture of Herr Reinhardt's expensive stone wall caused me to think of Morris Gest, the entrepreneur whose efforts made it possible. If it had not been for Morris Gest and his skillful bravery in the American promotion of "The Miracle," Herr Reinhardt would have no stone wall and he could not have shown Mr. Woollcott "the black swans patrolling the pond, the golden pheasants preening themselves in the sun, and the flamingoes passing in pallid procession."

Of course, Herr Reinhardt has no memory for such things, but I did not believe that Mr. Woollcott, himself a hardy sentimentalist, could forget that Herr Reinhardt's stone wall came from the brain and blood of Morris Gest.

Mr. Gest is now a bankrupt, ruined by his devotion to such ungrateful grandeurs as "The Miracle." I see him now and then at first nights, his head wounded but unbowed, looking for a chance to come back and do it all over again. I hope that before he is through with the theater he will pay for other stone walls, black swans, crested cranes and flamingoes—not for Woollcott, Reinhardt, Otto Kahn, Moisse or others, but for Morris Gest, a game, unselfish and foolish showman.

"Little America is the world's most perfect health resort," VanDeVeer said recently. "Bacteria cannot exist in continued temperatures of -65 to 70 deg. below zero; the air near the Pole is bracing and vital, since the continent is a great plateau, 10,000 feet above sea level. We noted that the South Pole territory is much colder than the North Pole, on account of the plateau and the constant sweeping winds."

"Winds attain a velocity of 150 miles an hour at the Rockefeller Mountain range near the pole," Rucker added, "and pile the dry, powdery snow in inconceivable drifts. The hardest job was not flying over the pole nor establishing camps or even keeping alive. It was the continual shoveling of snow, 365 days in the year. When we dug out our Ford plane for the flight we had to remove forty-two tons of snow that had accumulated on it. The men completed this huge job in twenty-four hours. The same winds were the cause of the wrecking of one of the Byrd planes while it was exploring near the Rockefeller Mountains, 175 miles from the base camp at Little America. Although buried in snow, tied down with a 'deadman' and filled with blocks of ice to increase its weight, the plane was swept away and smashed against the mountain side. Only the daring of Commander Byrd, who took off from the base in another plane during a three-hour lull in the blizzard, brought about the rescue of the four marooned men."

Perhaps the greatest excitement of the trip came when the planes had been dug out of the snow and were being prepared for flight.

"Due to terrific cold a canvas hood was constructed which slipped over the motors," Rucker said. "A gasoline torch was placed under this hood and the engine warmed for two hours. In the meantime the engine oil which was always removed at the end of a flight would be heated to the boiling point in one of the huts. When the motor was warmed enough a shout would go up for the 'oil man.' He would come out of the hut on the dead run, carrying a pail of hot oil. It always was a race between him and Jack Frost, for at 60 below the bucket of oil would congeal in three minutes. If anything delayed him on the way the pail would have to be taken back into the hut and warmed over."

The actual flight was filled with drama, and thrilling drama, too.

"Everyone turned out for the take-off," Rucker said. "Then we went inside and kept in constant touch with our commander during the seventeen-hour flight. We could hear the hum of his motors in the radio earphones and knew that all was well. He returned just three hours ahead of a blizzard. After the flight the work was about completed and we prepared to return home."

BOWL TO GIVE NOVELTIES

Several Accredited Modernisms, Including Arbos and Eichheim Compositions, to be Heard

BY ISABEL MORSE JONES

Although there will be no modern music night this summer at the Hollywood Bowl there will be plenty of novelties spread along through the season and the numbers will be accredited modernisms which have made a success with the critical and which will really enlarge our understanding of contemporary composers. The new Spanish works which Enrique Arbos will bring to Hollywood the last two weeks of the Bowl season were mentioned last week.

Jumping across to the other side of the world, an oriental number, "Burma," will be conducted by the composer, Henry Eichheim, August 7. Mr. Eichheim presented it in Los Angeles two winters ago with entire success.

JAVANESE THEMES

It is composed of authentic Javanese themes used in the fascinating and intricate synchronous rhythms of the Far East. Gongs and temple bells which Mr. Eichheim has collected upon two visits over there, will be brought down from his home in Santa Barbara for the occasion. As these strange instruments were made for music out-of-doors the effect is certain to be of exceptional interest.

Mr. Eichheim, formerly a member of the Boston Symphony and a composer with unusual sympathy for oriental music, of which he has been a profound student for many years, has just returned from an eight months' tour abroad. He is completing a Javanese trilogy and working on the score for a new travel-picture on Java. He conducted "Burma" in Philadelphia at the invitation of Leopold Stokowski last winter and just recently in Paris.

FRENCHMEN PRAISE

The French critics, who are notoriously prejudiced against American compositions, were so impressed with the work that they felt it necessary to speak of him as a "typically French master." His friends, Stokowski, Monteux and Rodzinski, were there to hear it.

Eichheim's work was favorably compared with Ravel's and one discriminating listener wrote glowingly of his unique ability to sustain the oriental mood without the error of insistent climax, thus maintaining the mystery and the beauty of the true Javanese inspiration. When one remembers that their adored Debussy acknowledged his debt to the music of Java in his writings, it is easy to see that the French paid Mr. Eichheim a very high compliment.

Vincent d'Indy, an old friend of his, still at the head of Schola Cantorum there, came to hear the work and praised the score.

Ravel's "Bolero," which has been recorded so admirably both by the composer and by Koussevitsky, will also be a Bowl novelty this summer. This tour de force will be one of the talked-of successes, I predict.

Other new works of outstanding interest will be the world premiere of Roy Harris's symphony and one of the prize-winning Victor compositions, Bennett's "Marche." The latter requires the services of two pianists as part of the orchestra.

ELSA ALSEN TO APPEAR AS SOLOIST

Soprano Finds American Audiences Composed of "Every-Day People"

Elsa Alsen, prima donna soprano, who travels from coast to coast filling singing engagements, but lives in Hollywood, will appear as soloist on July 26 during the regular summer season of "symphonies under the stars," which starts July 8.

"The taunt that the American is a dollar man," said Miss Alsen, "springs from those who do not know him. I have found that audiences at concerts and operas are not made up so much of 'professional music lovers' as they are of every-day people who make no fuss about their appreciation of music."

The dramatic soprano was born in Russian Poland of a Norwegian father and French mother. Heredity and environment have thus played an important part in her ability to understand and sing feelingly the compositions of many countries. At 17 years of age she began her studies in Breslau, and after twenty months made her debut as a church and concert singer.

The range and volume of her voice, then a contralto, completely filled the cathedrals where she sang. She was advised to try opera. After six months' preparation she won success as Azucena in "Il Trovatore." Later she became a dramatic soprano on the advice of several distinguished conductors. In a tour of fourteen European cities, held to commemorate the 150th anniversary of Beethoven, she gained her first great success.

Miss Alsen is only one of eight internationally famous singers, musicians and dancers, who will appear on solo nights at the Hollywood Bowl. The season will last eight weeks, ending on August 30. It annually draws those who follow music from many parts of the world.

Music History Lectures Will Be Presented

A series of eight concert lectures will be given during July and August on the general subject of "History of Music" by Dr. Bruce Gordon Kingsley, in co-operation with the extension division of the University of California, according to announcement.

Beginning July 14 the lectures will be given each Monday and Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock in West hall of the Beaux Arts Building, Eighth and Beacon streets. Following are the subjects and dates of the lectures:

July 14—Bach.
July 16—Handel, Haydn.
July 21—Mozart, Gluck.
July 23—Beethoven.
July 28—Mendelssohn.
July 30—Schubert.
August 4—Schumann.
August 6—Modern masters of the symphony.

PUPILS IN RECITAL

The pupils of Arcady Kaufman gave a recital recently at the Hollywood Conservatory of Music.

Studios Will Remain Open

The Smallman Studios are open during the summer months. John Smallman will divide his time between the Pallasdes Chautauqua, where he is musical director, and his studio in the Beaux-Arts Building. Many of his students continue as soloists in the local churches, among them being Blythe Taylor Burns, Immanuel Presbyterian; Frank Pursell, St. Paul's Cathedral; Betty Boldrick, First Congregational Church; Lois Miller Bates, First Presbyterian Church of Santa Monica; Warren Coelman, St. Paul's Cathedral; Altha Montague Elliott, First Methodist Episcopal and Ruth Somerindyke, University Methodist.

MUSIC and Musicians

New Artists to be Introduced

Mrs. Elisabeth S. Coolidge, one of the United States' most intelligent music benefactors, will give a chamber music festival in the city of Chicago next October in which she will introduce outstanding new artists from Europe.

It is Mrs. Coolidge's custom to take American artists abroad for concerts which she finances and to bring European musicians to America. At present, Emile Ferir is in Paris on an annual Coolidge music mission.

The artists to be heard in Chicago are the Prosa String Quartet of London; Harriet Cohen, pianist, of London, and Emma Luebbecke-Job, pianist from Frankfort. A number of premieres of chamber music compositions will be presented.

Johnson Will be Presented in Recital

Tomorrow evening the Zoellner Conservatory of Music will present in the conservatory auditorium, 3839 Wilshire Boulevard, Hardesty Johnson, tenor, and member of its faculty, in recital. Mr. Johnson has recently come to Los Angeles after several years of teaching in Paris and New York, where he was associated with Jean De Reszke and Oscar Seagle.

As soloist, he has made noteworthy appearances in Paris and London. Then followed two years' concertising in Europe and America with the De Reszke Singers, as first tenor. Mr. Johnson has been heard often in New York with Walter Damrosch and at the Lewishon Stadium Concerts. This will be Mr. Johnson's first recital appearance in Los Angeles and also his introduction as a faculty member of the Zoellner conservatory.

Joseph Zoellner, Jr., will be the accompanist and those interested in vocal art are invited to attend. The following is the program:

Gordon School Ends Season

The graduation exercises which took place recently at The Gordon School for Girls, 1458 Laurel avenue, Hollywood, were marked by the presence of Count and Countess Louis Hamon of London. The Gordon School Choral Club opened the program after the invocation had been spoken by Dr. A. H. Wurtele. Joan Murray, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John T. Murray then contributed several piano selections to the program, after which the prizes for the year were awarded.

Famed 'Cellist Arrives in City

Leo Schulz, the grand old man of the New York Philharmonic Symphony, is in Los Angeles. Mr. Schulz was the hero of the last concert of this orchestra's season when his fellow-members and the public feted him upon his retirement from active participation.

Mr. Schulz served as first 'cellist of the New York Symphony for thirty years and his last concert was notable for his solo work in the Schumann concerto and his conducting of his own work.

Acclaim Won by Youngster

Among the hundreds of professional children trained at the McAdam Normal School of Dancing, the latest to win success is little Shirley Jean Rickert, 4-year-old baby screen favorite, who has appeared in talking parts in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Gus Edwards, Jack White and Mickey McGuire productions and was first-prize winner in the recent flower pageant in Ocean Park. Petite Shirley Jean received her entire training under Miss McAdams.

BARITONE GIVES CONCERT

Wilbur Evans, Welsh baritone, will give a concert Tuesday evening at Patriotic Hall in which the Welsh Glee Club will assist.

Kosloff Will Address Meet

The State music teachers' convention will be addressed by Alexander Kosloff, Russian pianist, at its meeting in the Huntington Hotel, Pasadena July 10, next.

Mr. Kosloff's subject will be "The Music Profession in Russia and the Russian music Masters." He will illustrate his address with compositions by Lisdow, Rachmaninoff, Bortkiewitz, Scriabine, and Prokofieff.

Noted Soprano to Appear at Bowl

Elsa Alsen, soprano, who is one of eight famous artists to appear at Hollywood Bowl during the summer concert season starting July 8.

BOWL SCENE OF FIESTA

The fiesta, to be staged July 16, next, at Hollywood Bowl, has aroused interest among music lovers. The announcement is made by Veterans of Foreign Wars, sponsors of the program, that Gennaro Barra, tenor, and Lisa Roma, soprano, have been engaged to sing duets from Puccini's "La Boheme" and other operas, with Adolph Tandler conducting the accompanying symphony orchestra, as well as solo numbers. The program includes such well-known artists as Charles Wakefield Cadman, who will accompany Billy Lennon, boy tenor, in a cycle of new Cadman and Carrie Jacobs Bond songs; Calmon Luboviski, Russian violinist, and his Violin Choir; Homer Grunn, composer-pianist, in an original suite; Tudor Williams, baritone; the Aeolian Harp Ensemble, with Elizabeth Hughes, and an Ernest Belcher ballet.

In addition there will be Perullo and his band, as well as Ira Gay's International Orchestra of fifty pieces, comprised of representative groups of six nationalities in native costume, playing selections in synchronization.

ORGAN PLAYING DISCUSSED

"Now that the organ has taken its place in the theater for concert use, and in many of the better homes, the musical value of this instrument is being felt," Ernest Douglas, teacher of organ and composition, has asserted.

"Because it, the past many have only understood the organ as a church instrument, the sympathetic qualities of this instrument, as well as the variety of touch, was not appreciated," he further states. "In fact it has more variety of touch than the piano."

"A student who has a fair comprehensive piano foundation can be taught how to play the organ, if he seriously applies himself," he says. "One must be more attentive, in playing the organ, to phrasing in the intellectual side of interpretation in music, however. "Composers of all ages have been, fundamentally, great organists, and at present the field for organ playing consists of theater, concert and church work."

Mr. Douglas, who has been teaching organ playing for forty years, possesses two excellent two-manual instruments, one of which he has installed in the music room of his residence on Westmoreland avenue, and the other in his large music studio, which occupies the upper floor of his garage. In addition to his studio teaching, he also teaches at Holmby College, in Westwood, and is teacher of composition in the Los Angeles Conservatory of Music. His training was acquired in England, Germany and the United States.

Irregorian music and plain song are among the things to which he has given much study, and his "Treatise on Plain Song," is recognised as a standard work. Other published works include "Method of Organ Playing," "Mass in A-Minor," "Suite in B-Minor for Organ" in three parts, which won him the National Association of Organists' prize in 1926, and other miscellaneous organ compositions and church music.

He is organist and director of the choir at St. Matthias Church, in Los Angeles.

everywhere. Beverly Hills has grown to be a city. There were a handful of stars residing there when I last visited. I am lost in this new world here; it is like a different city, and I do not believe I would be happy now as I was when I once resided here."

MELNITZ has ambitious plans for picture production abroad. One of the first films to be made by the Terra will be directed by Max Reinhardt, the great German stage director. It will be produced in German, French, Spanish and English. The first production will be called "La Vie Parisienna," based on an Offenbach operetta, but brought up to date by the French author, Alfred Savoir, and with modern music added by the German composer, Erich Korngold, known for his "The Dead City," in which Maria Jeritza was early seen in this country.

Melnitz feels that Reinhardt is going to be immensely successful as a picture director. "His stage productions have of recent years shown the picture influence in the form that their presentation took," he said. "I think that he is fully prepared to avail himself of all the remarkable possibilities of the film-sound medium."

Melnitz declares that the American talkie is dead in Europe. "The American picture was headed for disaster even before the talkie came into existence," he continued. "The distributors of this country had made the mistake of flooding Europe with pictures, many of which were of mediocre quality.

"When the talkies came along Europe saw her opportunity. She has the chance now to achieve independence, and she is going to make the most of it. The pictures produced abroad will be presented in a variety of languages. It is the same program as is being carried out here in some of the studios, but the psychology is not right here for the production of films in foreign languages. You can import people and directors, but you cannot import the foreign spirit. Therefore, I am of the opinion that the majority of foreign films will be produced in Europe rather than in Hollywood."

COINCIDENT with Melnitz's visit, a new plan has been evolved in Hollywood for the production of foreign versions. The sponsor of this project is Friederich Zelnik, the European director. He has joined efforts with Carroll H. Dunning and Dodge Dunning, sponsors of the Dunning Process, for superimposing scenes taken in the studio on scenic natural backgrounds, which have been receiving such a large due of attention.

The plan evolved by Zelnik is the very unique one of photographing backgrounds here, and then taking the close-ups of actors in Europe, with scenario adjusted to fit the requirements of the European market. In a large scene in a musical picture only the chorus and the settings would be photographed in Hollywood, and then in Europe with a formal blue background used, the singing principals would be superimposed on the film. The voices of these principals would be simultaneously recorded, and a foreign chorus would also be engaged to sing, though they would not be photographed.

Remarkable results have already been secured with the Dunning process in photographing the New York Harbor backgrounds in "Anna Christe," and the banks of the Hudson River, and portions of New York in "New York Nights." The natural scenes were filmed in their reality, and the actors were then photographed onto the picture in the studio, thus effecting remarkable economy in time, money and effort.

WHILE ambitious plans are being entertained for the filming of foreign versions abroad, excellent reports are coming into the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios regarding the success of "Le Spectre Vert" ("Unholy Night") in the French market, according to Al Lewyn, in charge of foreign productions at that studio. A vast amount of effort is going into all these foreign films right here at the present juncture, with especial progress made in the Spanish versions.

Family Angle Popular Hoax

The "family" angle is the latest to be adopted by dancers.

It's been discovered that a young dancer introducing mother, father or grandfather who also hoofs, is sure-fire audience hooey, according to variety reports.

At the present time there are a half-dozen such teams touring the country, the story goes, and, with possibly one exception, all the relationships are false.

The family angle, of course, is proving a break for elderly dancers, but if the acts continue to multiply the novelty will undoubtedly be killed . . . and the public, undoubtedly, get wise.

Psychology of Music Topic of Study Course

"The Psychology of Music" will be studied by teachers, musicians and students of music during the six weeks' summer school of the University of Southern California, which opens tomorrow.

Given only once a year in the summer session of S. C., and available west of the Mississippi only at Southern California, this course will include a survey of outstanding experimental work done in the psychology of music, with analysis of principles of music teaching and tests of capacity and accomplishment in music. Dr. Arnold H. Wagner will instruct.

Summer classes in music literature and music appreciation at S. C. will be in charge of Mrs. Donzella Cross Boyle of the college of music of Cincinnati, O.

Otto J. Stahl of the University of Michigan's school of music, will head summer courses in ear training, music form and harmony.

Walter A. Allen, instructor in organ, Pomona College, will also teach harmony and ear training at Southern California this summer.

Alexander Stewart will head summer classes in orchestral instruments, community music and conducting, orchestral conducting and advanced choral oratorio.

Adelaide Trowbridge Perry will have charge of two normal piano classes; Doris Moon will teach keyboard harmony; Beulah Leitzell will instruct in music history, and Charles Pemberton will cover the fundamental principles of good melody in a course in Counterpoint I.

Arne Oldberg, director of the piano department and professor of composition in the Northwestern University school of music will fill the Alchen chair of music this summer at the University of Southern California. He will head two classes in composition commencing tomorrow, each class meeting five days a week, one on elementary composition at 1 p.m. and one in advanced composition meeting at 2 p.m.

Von Schillings Will Conduct German Opera

A cablegram from J. J. Vincent, managing director of the German Grand Opera Company, now in Berlin, has just announced the engagement of Max von Schillings as principal conductor of the company's third American tour next season.

Dr. von Schillings is a former director of the Prussian State Opera in Berlin, and attracted attention recently by a recording with the Berlin State Orchestra, of the Beethoven "Eroica" symphony. (No. 3, E flat major.)

Dr. von Schillings is an outstanding musical figure in Berlin. He is known somewhat to the American public through his opera, "Mona Lisa," produced at the Metropolitan Operahouse in New York, March 1, 1923. A composer of many achievements, he is recognized as a conductor of remarkable force and ability.

TRAVELING 'MIKE' ENDS ONE WORRY

Device Solves Problem That Has Bothered Many Directors

With novel and unique camera angles of the silent screen virtually exhausted, motion-picture directors and cameramen are now giving their attention and study to photography on the basis of the microphone, according to John Adolfi, director of "Recaptured Love," Vitaphone production now playing at Warner Brothers Theater in Hollywood. With the advent of talking pictures, the minds of the director and cameraman were seriously hampered by a new problem. Small as it is, the cylinder-shaped electrical gadget known as the microphone caused no end of mental agitation to the men behind the camera.

The "mike" hangs directly above the heads of the artists and at most, for distinct recording, not more than three feet. This restricted the cameras to horizontal angles. If they were moved just a little too high the "mike" would be in the picture.

As for most mechanical problems, there is nearly always some solution. Now Warner Brothers' studios have developed what is said to be an innovation in sound photography, and one which has vitally helped to eliminate the major part of sound-photography troubles.

It is the "traveling mike." With this mobile instrument it is possible to photograph large scenes, such as ballrooms and hotel lobbies. A good example of the new sound photography is brought to the screen in several sequences of "Recaptured Love." In one particular scene, representing a crowded ballroom of a large hotel, the camera remains stationary and it is the traveling mike that moves from one couple to another picking up individual conversations and sound effects.

"Recaptured Love" is taken from Basil Woon's original story, "Misdeal," and was adapted to the screen by Charles Kenyon. Belle Bennett heads a stellar cast that includes John Halliday, Dorothy Burgess, George Bickel, Richard Tucker, Bernard Durkin and Brooks Benedict.

FIGUEROA TO HOUSE WAR PLAY

"Paths O'Glory" Premiere Takes Place Tonight; Veterans Sponsor

The world premiere of "Paths O'Glory," the psychic war play by Wallace Stark, eastern actor and writer, will take place tonight at the Figueroa Playhouse.

The play, which is being sponsored by the Quentin Roosevelt Chapter No. 5, Disabled War Veterans of the World War, has been in rehearsal for some weeks, according to William H. Strauss, who has been directing it, and was given a dress rehearsal before an audience composed of inmates of the soldiers' home and hospital at Sawtelle and a large number of invited guests last night.

Careful attention has been paid to reproduce the locale of the story, involving the ingenuity and artistry of stage technicians. The play, which is in three acts, is laid in two scenes in the battle zones of France, one being that of a shell-ruined church near the front lines and the other a crater of a shell hole in the first-line trenches. Although the play takes place ten days before the signing of the armistice and pictures events which took place at that time, it has little of the gruesomeness which prevails in most war plays, the management declares.

HARRIS'C SINGLE SCRIPT

Contrary to published report, Ray Harris has not signed a long-term contract with Fox, but expects to finish within a fortnight his first talkie writing for that studio: a collaboration with Russell Medcraft on adaptation and dialogue of "Hot Numbers," a college story with music. Unless resigned for more work at Fox, Harris will continue to write and market his original stories, several of which are now under consideration by major producing firms.

NEW ALARMS NO WORRY, SMITH SAYS

Author-Scenarist Makes Statement Concerning Innovations

New alarms about the menace which confronts the theater in the form of the radio, television and other devices for the entertainment of humanity are not worrying those who are conversant with the theater's history of more than 3000 years, declares Wallace Smith, author-scenarist. These new diversions which seem to threaten the popularity of the theater are only repetitions of scores of others that have arisen from time to time in past centuries to threaten its prosperity, according to Smith.

"It will require something more fundamental than mechanical ingenuity to destroy the love of humanity for the theater," declares Smith. "True, these things may divert people temporarily and result in a depression in theater attendance from time to time, but the affinity of man and the theater is a permanent one, based on strong psychological tendencies.

"Man is a gregarious creature, and he never loses his fondness for mingling with crowds. He may prefer to take his entertainment by his fireside, but sooner or later the lure of the theater with its throngs of his fellow-men will call him back. The recent changes we have witnessed are but the phases of a continuous history of thousands of years, during which the theater has grown more and more popular."

Scrapple Not Easy to Get, Brendel Says

El Brendel, character comedian featured in "Svenson's Wild Party," which opened at the Orpheum Theater yesterday, is a native son of Philadelphia, and like most Philadelphians, likes "scrapple" for breakfast.

Scrapple, be it known to those who have never made the acquaintance of this delicacy, is a sort of glorified mush. It is composed of Indian corn meal, water and scraps of meat, usually pork. It is made like mush, allowed to harden, then sliced and fried in butter.

Brendel's chief complaint with Hollywood is that he has been unable to get original Philadelphia scrapple and on a recent eastern trip he made it a point to stock up with his favorite dish before returning to the Pacific Coast.

The first morning on the Pullman when homeward bound he called the porter to his stateroom, delivered a length of scrapple and instructed him to have the chef prepare it for breakfast.

In a few minutes the porter entered with a covered dish which he deposited in front of the comedian with a flourish.

Brendel's astonishment was historic. For the chef, who apparently had never heard of scrapple, had served it sliced very thin and packed in ice.

"Bring me some ham and eggs," sighed Brendel.

BILLIE DOVE "AT LIBERTY"

Star Parts From Husband and Studio; Will Take Long Vacation From Both, She Says

BY ALMA WHITAKER

A picture entitled "The Notorious Affair" is running at Warner's Downtown Theater, and Billie Dove is its star. The title is a trifle ominous, for Billie is much in the news just now. Not only has she broken her contract with First National, but she is also parting from Irvin Willat, her erstwhile spouse of six years' standing.

The general effect is that Billie is a beautiful slave recently freed from servitude. Six pictures in eight months . . . nary a holiday for three and one-half years, always on call at the studio, so that even week-ends were precarious . . . Billie's lovely eyes, Billie's provocative mouth, excite a rush of pity. It is only later that one realizes how highly becoming slavery must have been. Likewise that there is a certain chic about the young lady that implies dashing discreet liberty.

FOUR READY

"I have four pictures ready for release, so it seemed a good time to take a real holiday," says Billie earnestly. "A man called me up about a picture today . . . a good part for me, too, but I told him I wasn't available for ages . . ."

Now it may as well be admitted that rumor is busy coupling the names of Howard Hughes of "Hell's Angels" fame and Billie Dove, so one couldn't resist a question . . .

"Oh, I couldn't marry for a year anyway," says Billie, gently, sweetly, almost reproachfully. "And in the meantime, I am free, free . . . free to do all the jolly outdoor day-time things. I am going to play all the summer and just enjoy Hollywood. I have worked so hard for seven years. I'm going to all the beaches, play lots of tennis, take up golf, ride horseback . . . all the day-time revels. And no picture is going to mar my busy loafing. And when I do work again, I won't do more than three or four pictures a year at most. I don't need to worry about the money part of it now . . .

"Won't you miss the 30,000 a week fan letters?" I asked.

"Thirty thousand a month," corrected Billie. "But maybe I won't miss them, with four pictures being released at intervals throughout the summer . . .

"Clever Billie, you haven't let public adoration turn your head," I eulogize.

"That would be very foolish for anyone to do," said Billie devoutly. "I don't take it to myself . . . it's just a character in a story the people love."

NO CYNICISM

"Confess now, have men made you a little cynical?" I probed. Because, of course, these starry beauties do sometimes become cynical . . .

"Goodness no," dimpled Billie. "Besides, cynicism is always a boomerang, don't you think?"

This Billie is full of wise little philosophies of this kind, which just drip from her ruby lips. I just know Billie was good at writing and reciting wise proverbs when she was at school. I also suspect Billie of writing a book . . . it could be quite a marvelous book if she could be a little reckless. But at present Billie reeks of charming discretion. "I am very fond of Mr. Willat," she says. "We shall always be friends. He is in Paris now. But I think our parting was for the best."

"I am enjoying my family so much these days, mother, father, brother and his flivver," she laughs. "Brother is a cameraman, a fine good boy and loves his work. It is much more fun driving in his wild flivver than in a grand car . . . he's waiting for me now, and we are going to meet mother."

So whatever Billie does in the future will be done gracefully and prettily. If it should be Howard Hughes, there won't be any hasty day-after-the-divorce wedding. Everything will be tidy and correct. She can, I mean, even elevate a topless Haroldteen flivver to seeming Rolls-Royce realms. It was etherealized as she stepped into it and sped away with brother, gaily waving a tiny kid-gloved hand. "A Notorious Affair," with Billie in it? Incredible title.

'CAPRICE' TO PLAY TWO WEEKS MORE

Fay Bainter Will Appear Another Fortnight at Belasco

The Belasco Theater management announces that the comedy hit, "Caprice," is in its final two weeks. The engagement of Fay Bainter in the naughty Viennese comedy, with Reginald Owen and Lily Cahill, will depart Saturday evening, July 12.

Unanimous and unstinted praise has been showered upon Belasco and Curran, the producers, it is said, for the beauty of their "Caprice" production and the excellence of the cast supporting Miss Bainter. The popular star is credited, it is said, with giving one of the finest performances of her entire career. As the dashing Ilsa, she sweeps all before her. Reginald Owen and Lily Cahill also come in for a large amount of praise for the sterling quality of their work. Others in the cast are David Scott, the 18-year-old actor, who has made a most decided hit; Gladys McConnell, Frederick Sullivan, Alice Parks and Lucian Self.

Beginning July 13, for one week, the Belasco will house the ever-popular Duncan Sisters, Vivian and Rosetta, in their delightful two-girl show that was such a success here recently. Following the Duncans will come Ina Claire in the racy comedy, "Rebound."

Olsen Puts on Summer Revue

Ushering in a new Sunday night policy of dining, dancing and entertainment, George Olsen's club, Culver City, will open early this evening, offering a special performance of Olsen's new summer revue at 8 o'clock in addition to the regular show, which is given later.

Olsen's club is now in its tenth capacity week, and is setting a pace for diversion which compares with the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic in its heyday in New York and with the ultra Cafe Ambassadeurs in Paris.

Stage and screen stars, producers, directors, composers and other "who's who" of Hollywood gather nightly at Olsen's.

'WHITE CARGO' CHANGED GOLD COAST CONDITIONS

The thousands of white men who toil in the territory on the western side of Africa known as the Gold Coast have, in all probability, never heard of Earl Carroll, the theatrical producer. To him they are indebted, nevertheless, for the improved living conditions which have been introduced there within recent years and which have made that district a comparative paradise. Or so a story asserts.

It was the play "White Cargo," produced by Earl Carroll, which changed conditions. When this drama was presented in London the stir which is caused was much greater than the one with which it met in this country. Americans were content to view the production merely as gripping entertainment, but in England it appealed also as an indictment against the administrations of the Gold Coast exploiters.

"White Cargo," the all-talking version of which is now being presented for the first time in the West at the California Theater, raised a storm which swept into Parliament, where debates arose regarding the fidelity of the characterizations, the background, the temptations of white men in the tropics and the moral breakdown of those who remained there for an appreciable length of time. The wiles of the alluring, primitive Tondeleyo, the only feminine character in the play, were argued with much vehemence. But in the end the producer and the authors of the colorful drama were vindicated and the plantation owners were prevailed upon to subject themselves to taxes which have gone to make the Gold Coast more habitable for white men.

Cigarettes Do Not Intrigue This Actress

Mia Marvin has gained the reputation of being a Jill of all trades.

Miss Marvin, whose blond beauty and vivacious personality are captivating audiences at El Capitan Theater in "Nancy's Private Affair," is, in addition to being a capable actress, a talented musician.

Miss Marvin plays the violin and sings. Then, too, she is an accomplished toe dancer.

But there is one weak link in her chain of abilities.

She can't smoke!

"When I was playing in 'The Harem' some time ago in San Francisco," she explains, "I had to smoke a cigarette in one scene. I'd never smoked before, and the worst of it all was that I was expected to carry on a conversation at the same time. I certainly wasn't nonchalant when I reached for that cigarette! The smoke got in my eyes and throat and I very nearly choked."

Marjorie White Will Stick to Feminine Roles

Marjorie White, who for a long time wanted to play a boy character in a picture, is cured. It isn't the cinch she imagined it might be.

In "Happy Days," all-star musical spectacle now at the Boulevard, she portrays the character of a girl who, in order to gain admission to the Stage and Screen Club, attires herself in boy's clothing and gets a job as a page.

In the club she is treated as a boy and becomes the victim of much back slapping and vigorous kicking. When the picture was finished Miss White was carrying a number of black and blue marks about her person.

Every star on the Fox Movietone City roster appears in "Happy Days," the climax of which is a minstrel show with new songs and music, new jokes and any number of surprise numbers. Benjamin Stoloff directed the production, for which Sidney Lanfield and Edwin Burke wrote the story and dialogue.

Follies Shows 'Merry Whirl'

In the Follies' next attraction, "Merry Whirl," which commences today, will be found many really versatile players, the management avers. Every burlesque fan in Los Angeles knows Evelyn Myers and the range of her capabilities. Then there is Bumps Mack, an eccentric comedian, and Ray Parsons, who occupies a place all alone among the funny men in burlesque. Tex Oliver, Melba Roy, Larry Farnum and George Crump are all conspicuous.

There will be interest shown in the chorus of forty dancing girls who will sing, also. These will vie with the Follies' own "runway chorus" under the leadership of Soubrette Evelyn Myers. "Merry Whirl" follows the idea of revues.

ORGAN RECITAL GIVEN

An organ recital complimentary to the Diocesan Summer School was given Friday evening at St. Paul's Cathedral by Dudley Warner Fitch with John Drury, the boy soprano, assisting.

'Chess Player' Being Shown at Filmarte

Among the French pictures to reach this country is "The Chess Player," based on M. Henry Dupuy-Mazuel's novel which deals with historical episodes occurring in Poland in 1778.

This film, now showing at the Filmarte Theater, was photographed in Poland. It is an artistic achievement to the credit of a group headed by Director Raymond Bernard, whose "The Miracle of the Wolves" was recently released at this theater. Charles Dullin, a favorite of the Paris stage and screen, is cast in the leading role, that of the fascinating Baron de Kempelen, whose mysterious automaton in the form of a chess player enacts an important part in the development of the drama.

The love theme is carried by Mlle. Edith Jahenne, a beautiful actress who makes the role of Sophie, ward of the Empress Catherine of Russia, an appealing and sympathetic portrayal. The plot centers around the conflict that arises when Sophie wins the love of both a Russian and a Polish officer.

The atmosphere and local color of that far-away day are said to have been skilfully recreated by Director Bernard, who displays much imagination in telling an absorbing story, beautifully photographed.

The Filmarte program offers a second feature that is attracting much interest, this being the picturization of Edgar Allan Poe's fantastic tale of horror and doom, "The Fall of the House of Usher."

'Journey's End' Now at Tower

"Journey's End" is the attraction at the Tower Theater. Not unmindful of all the terrors on the part of the legion of admirers of the stage play, Tiffany-Gainsborough, its producers, made an inviolable law at the very start—it must preserve R. C. Sheriff's drama in letter, spirit and gesture.

"Journey's End" is a story of British officers in a dug-out at St. Quentin in March, 1918.

In the cast are Colin Clive, Anthony Bushell, David Manners, Ian Maclaren and Charles Gerrard.

ANOTHER HOME-TOWN BOY MAKES GOOD AS ACTOR

In Austin, Minn., Kenneth Daigneau is the chap the newspapers mean when they say, "home town boy makes good." Moreover, he is the only actor of that community.

Daigneau, who is now playing the gentleman crook in "Crime," the melodrama at the President Theater, had no intention as a youth of going on the stage.

He was destined to follow his father's footsteps as a physician. Then he and his younger brother found themselves managing motion-picture theaters in near-by small towns. After that he decided he wanted to be a commercial photographer. About this time a little trouble with Mexico occurred and Daigneau stopped taking pictures long enough to don a uniform.

For several years he did not change back to civilian clothes. At the start of America's entry into the World War he enlisted and saw service overseas, rising from a private to the rank of first lieutenant. After that he was made a claims officer in Belgium and Holland.

Following his discharge he went back to Austin and tried to settle down to business. He discovered that routine was not for him and so he announced to his family that he intended to be an actor. The next week he started off for New York to attend dramatic school.

Except for the time it has taken his automobile to travel from the coast to his Minnesota home and back again, Daigneau has never stopped working.

JACK MULHALL MAKES MOVE

Salary Boost, New Starring Contract Draw Actor to R.-K.-O. Lot; "Fall Guy" First Effort

Jack Mulhall, who has been hanging about the picture business these past seventeen years (and making a pretty good living at it, too,) has moved his make-up box and coat rack from the First National to the R.-K.-O. studio.

"The Fall Guy," from a play by George Abbott, at the R.-K.-O. Theater, is the first tangible evidence of the move.

Jack likes the picture. "It's nothing extraordinary—just a slice out of New York life around Forty-second street. I play the part of a small-time drug clerk. Fired, I try to keep up appearances at home, make the folks believe I am still working. I become entangled with a narcotic gang. They try to make me the 'fall guy,' the fellow who takes the 'rap' or the punishment for the men higher up. Eventually, I turn the tables and come out sort of a hero.

"I presume one reason why I am satisfied with the picture is that it represents my first effort on the R.-K.-O. lot. I like the R.-K.-O. lot. We took some time for rehearsals on this film, we knew what we were doing when we started shooting. I had a chance to work out my lines and work out my characterization. First National had been rather rushing me."

In contrast to the eight or nine pictures which he has been grinding out on the First National lot, Jack will make four or five a year for R.-K.-O. He won a raise in salary, too. When it was suggested that the reason he has stayed in pictures seventeen years is because he has never been starred, Mulhall hastened to disagree.

"Oh, no," he answered, "I've been starred lots of times. I'm up the ladder and then down a few rungs. I don't know why I'm still working steadily. Maybe it's because I like to work and because I get along with people."

Basil Rathbone in Trenches During War

Basil Rathbone, who is featured with Billie Dove in "A Notorious Affair," which is now playing at Warner Brothers' Downtown Theater, was among the first 100,000 to go to France for his country, England, in 1914.

He enlisted in August, 1914, and was demobilized in the spring of 1919. Rathbone joined up with the London Scottish Guards, then was transferred to the Liverpool Scottish Guards as an officer. Three years of actual fighting saw him in the front-line trenches off and on.

Large Stage at Pantages Will Be Used

Using the modern facilities of a stage with an area of 10,000 square feet, Pantages Hollywood Theater will feature spectacular stage shows and orchestral features in conjunction with the screen attractions each week.

Panchon and Marco "Ideas" will be enlarged and elaborated before being presented in this new playhouse. In the "Country Club Idea" which accompanies this week's showing of "Devil's Holiday," with Nancy Carroll, forty girls appear. Pantages's singing chorus is another additional feature.

Gary Cooper Plays Spy in Film at Bard's

The unique role of a young Yankee soldier of the Civil War who must be purposely captured as a spy is enacted by Gary Cooper in "Only the Brave," current Bard's Downtown attraction.

Disappointed in love, the Yankee volunteers for a hazardous espionage assignment, which means that he must fall into the hands of the Confederates in order to give them false information.

Once captured he is kept prisoner on a southern plantation, where he falls in love with the beautiful daughter of the owner. Mary Brian plays the part of the heroine, who awakens his fight for love and life.

Talkie shorts and Pathe sound news reel complete the program.

OKLAHOMAN RECEIVES IN STUDIO BUNGALOW

The justly famous bungalow of Will Rogers, whose starring Fox-Movietone picture, "So This is London," opened recently at the Carthay Circle Theater, was the setting for Rogers's fall from grace. It was in the living-room of this house that he, much abashed and shame-faced, slipped a pair of yellow spats over his shoes, something required of him in a scene of "So This is London."

The "most gosh awful day" in his experience, according to what he told Director John G. Blystone.

The Rogers bungalow is a completely equipped Spanish style building and it is no secret that Will is proud of it. The fact that Rogers never uses make-up in any picture in which he appears, that he wears the same sort of clothes he wears in every-day life, has given the impression to many that Rogers does not use it.

But this very bungalow has been the meeting place and reunion of many of the Oklahoman's close friends, including Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Louis Wiley of the New York Times, Homer Croy, John McCormick, Mrs. McCormack and their daughter, among others.

"So This is London" is based on the stage play which George M. Cohan so successfully produced. Irene Rich heads the supporting cast, which includes the youthful Frank Albertson and Maureen O'Sullivan.

Tibbett's Great Picture Gets First Popular Exhibition

Lawrence Tibbett, known as the greatest living baritone and the first American to reach the topmost position in operatic circles, is now blazing a new trail, for he is the first major opera star to be featured in a talking picture.

"The Rogue Song," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's drama of the Caucasus filmed entirely in Technicolor with Tibbett as the star, is now playing at Loew's State Theater—the first popular showing in downtown Los Angeles.

Tibbett sings songs ranging from those of operatic caliber, with symphony orchestra accompaniment, to simple love ballads. He rides at breakneck pace through varied adventures, while ballets, mountain scenery and other details are reputed to make this picture one of the most elaborate of the year.

Tibbett himself is a romance. The son of William Edward Tibbett, former Sheriff of Kern county, who died capturing the bandit McKinney, Tibbett was born and reared in the West. After attending school in Los Angeles he became an actor. He was on his way to success at this when his voice was discovered by Josef Depuy and he was launched in opera. Today he is one of the greatest of the Metropolitan stars.

When Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer signed him for the new picture special preparations were made for it was to be the first approach to an operatic film. The story was written by Frances Marion, with dialogue by John Colton of "Shanghai Gesture" and "Rain" fame. Herbert Stothart was chosen to compose the music. Clifford Grey wrote the lyrics and interpolations were contributed by Franz Lehar. Besides Tibbett's songs there is one with a women's chorus sung by Elsa Alsen, Wagnerian soprano, and one with Wallace Macdonald and a male "bandit chorus."

Edward Clark Plans Opening of Novel Stage and Screen Studio Here

Edward Clark, New York actor, author, director and producer, at present engaged in the scenario department at Paramount Studio, is reported that organization to open a dramatic academy of stage and screen technique and Little Theater. The academy will be located at 8620 Sunset Boulevard.

In explaining his methods of training for stage and screen work, Clark declared that it will be entirely by stage direction, giving the student the advantage of practical experience behind the footlights at all times.

Such theatrical producers as Arthur Hammerstein, John Cort, William H. Harris and the Schuberts have presented Clark's plays on Broadway. Among stars who have appeared in these plays under his direction are Louise Dresser, Ernest Torrence, Frank Fay, Harry Green, Nancy Welford, Lowell Sherman and George Bancroft.

Drama Classes Attract Many

The Hollywood Community School of the Theater, which, according to reports, has recently completed one of the most successful spring terms in its history, announces its fourth annual summer session, which will open tomorrow. According to reports from the studio, enrollments have already been recorded from practically every State in the Union. For the past two weeks residents from Florida, New York, Chicago, Washington, Montana, Nevada, Philadelphia have arrived in Hollywood and signed for summer courses under the direction of Neely Dickson.

Many public performances in which students were given opportunity for actual professional work were presented during the past season. Summer school students, it is announced, will be given the same advantages of appearing in public in practical application of class work.

CHILDREN TO BE STARRED

With negotiations from film studios under way, and rehearsals begun, Maurice L. Kusell, who heads the Maurice L. Kusell Studio of Theatrical Dancing, is preparing one of the largest and most unusual screen dance acts ever produced in his studio. With a cast composed entirely of children, the production takes the form of a grown-up revue, and promises screen audiences much in the way of genuine entertainment.

Many Los Angeles theatergoers will recall the performance staged at the Mayan Theater, shortly after its opening, featuring more than 150 Maurice L. Kusell youngsters. The success of this performance prompted the producer to attempt a similar project for the screen.

Among the youngsters appearing in the production are many who have already gained prominence on stage and screen, as well as the select group of professional youngsters known as "Kusell Stars of Tomorrow."

Young Stars Score in New Stage Piece

Among the interesting dramatic productions on view this week is Alice Pike Barney's, "Is Wrong Right," now playing an engagement at the Theater Mart. Featured in this piece is Georgia Hale, prominent for her work on both stage and screen. The brilliant work of this young actress has been evidenced many times here as well as in the East. She is well known for her especially outstanding performance as Charlie Chaplin's leading lady in "The Gold Rush."

Appearing with Miss Hale in the cast is Dorothy West, who recently arrived from the eastern stage, where she has been portraying numerous ingenue roles.

Texas Pupils Study Dancing

Pupils from every State in the United States. This is the assertion made by the Theodore Kosloff Studio of Dancing, where summer classes are being conducted under the direction of Mrs. Theodore Kosloff. Eva Russo, Kosloffs Flower and Theodore Kosloff himself.

Texas is the best represented. There are fifty young people from that State alone who are training in the various intricacies of the Imperial Russian ballet every morning.

Dancers Held Over for Week

Owing to its popularity at the Boulevard Theater, the unit of Bud Murray's "California Sunbeams" has been held over for a second week at the Washington Boulevard house. The dancers are appearing in an entirely new set of routines and are proving a popular feature of the newly installed prologues.

In addition to his work in the producing field, Murray is spending much of his time organizing summer courses at his studio. One of the new studies offered is "Modernized Ballet," to be given under the direction of Mary Frances Taylor, late of such productions as "The Student Prince," "Oh Susanna," "Gone Hollywood" and Broadway melody." Miss Taylor has worked out an interesting series of lessons which combine the fundamentals of classic ballet training and the more modern forms of dance art.

Films Feature Tiny Dancers

Seven-year-old Adeline Craig, delineator of juvenile characters and character dances, has been constantly before the kleigs since sound pictures caused such an increased demand for dancers. Some recent pictures in which she has appeared are, "Rain or Shine," "Happy Days" and "Anna Christie." She took the part of Angie Grady in "Sunny Side Up," and is in "On Your Back" with Irene Rich, not yet released. At present she is working for Pathe in a picture so far untitled.

Miss Craig specializes in folk dances, giving authentic interpretations of the dances of many countries. She is a pupil of the Kirby DeGage Dance Studio, and at present Mr. Kirby is routining several new numbers for her, among them the Fado Blanquita, a folk dance of Portugal and Spain.

Ballet Master to Teach Here

Signor G. V. Rosi, former director of the Alhambra Theater, London, the La Scala, Milan, and the Imperial Theater, Tokio, Japan, has just signed a long-term contract with the Lon Murray School for Stage Dancing and Dramatics.

G.V. ROSI

Rosi is now conducting classes in ballet, Grecian, oriental and other dances, for both beginners and advanced students. A new open-air studio located on the roof of the studio will be one of the feature of the summer classes.

WORK CREATES INTEREST

Grace Wood Jess, the actress-singer now in Los Angeles coaching stage and screen players in the art of character delineation, is a protegee of the French singing actress, Yvette Guilbert. Miss Jess is one of the few exponents of this art, and her work is proving of great interest to art circles of Los Angeles and Hollywood.

DANCERS TRAIN FOR EAST

On July 1, Albertina Rasch will start training a coterie of Hollywood dancers to appear in leading New York productions early this fall. The dancers will be coached in her Hollywood studios for their Broadway appearances. A group of New York dancers already has appeared in Hollywood productions and from time to time others will be brought out from the New York studio.

The dancers from Hollywood will be featured in an ensemble of twenty-four Albertina Rasch girls in Bobby Connolly's production, "Princess Charming," scheduled to go into rehearsals in New York on August 15.

Miss Rasch also has been drafted to stage all the dances for "The Little Show," an Erlanger production scheduled to open in New York about August 15. Negotiations are being carried by the maestra with another leading Broadway producer for the staging of the dances in a forthcoming superproduction.

Miss Rasch has just added to her staff of assistants, Bob Gilbert, former assistant to Sammy Lee, and himself a featured dancer in such motion-picture productions as "The Sea Hawk." Gilbert will conduct a special course of one month to train Hollywood dancers in tapping for the New York productions.

OUR ARTISTS IN PERSON

NO. 1 BORIS DEUTSCH

BY ARTHUR MILLIER

(Ed. Note: This is the first of a series of word portraits depicting outstanding Southern California artists.)

Twelve years of isolation, spent for the most part in flats on the east side of Los Angeles, have ripened the genius of the Jewish painter, Boris Deutsch. Today he is a unique figure in American and perhaps in world art.

To spend an evening in his home among his paintings, drawings and prints is an unforgettable experience, thrill succeeding thrill as the artist produces canvas after canvas, knitting his entire work into a growing and consistent whole.

Deutsch has never had a studio in the usual sense of a specially equipped workshop with north light, high roof, and other luxuries supposedly essential to fine painting. He paints with equal ease by day or night and he is always at it, not as a habitual professional routine, but in the vain effort to fix the stream of images that well up ceaselessly in his mind.

The face of Deutsch, like his pictures, remains in the memory. His head is long with pronounced bony structure. All his features are large, even heavy, and there is a steady look in his eyes that tells of a man who knows exactly what he is doing and where he is going. Above his wide, deep forehead a stubborn mass of curly red hair rises skyward. His mouth is large, strongly lined and good humored, and his chin is cleft. There are three vertical concentration marks between his eyebrows, intensified by squinting at his paintings while working.

The mental and emotional background for his paintings—from which he is gradually emerging—was furnished by his childhood days in Russia, where, though his family was poor, a devoted mother encouraged his early efforts to draw and made it possible for Deutsch to study at the Academy of Riga, Poland, and later in the museums of Berlin. If you talk to Deutsch about his beginnings he always says: "I owe everything to my mother."

There is another woman in his life whose faith has not wavered through years of struggle, poverty and obscurity—his beautiful wife Riva. Not only has she aided him with faith, but her beauty has been the point of departure for scores of canvases and hundreds of drawings and prints. More and more he has turned away from the pathos and tragedy of the Jewish story to compose in form and color upon some theme first seen in the face or attitude of Riva.

Boris Deutch

MUCH WORK DESTROYED

If recognition did not come to his early work, it was principally because Boris Deutsch never courted it. Most of his early canvases have been destroyed or painted over and only the strenuous intervention of his wife has saved the finest of them. His "Head of Christ," a monumental conception of a superior being, has fortunately survived those moments when, pregnant with new ideas, he has sacrificed an old picture. The result of this ruthless destruction of all early work that could not meet his growing critical sense is that Deutsch today, almost unknown except on the Pacific Coast, has a collection of masterpieces of modern painting imbued with a passion unparalleled since Vincent Van Gogh.

Allen Tucker has said that an artist is one who sees life in terms of design. In Deutsch's work it is the intense humanity of his faces and figures that throws a spell over the onlooker, and yet the painter does not conceive his works at all in terms of humanity, but in terms of art. In a woman's face he sees the strong unbroken line of cheek-contour on one side in contrast to the soft wavy line of the hair on the other. The eyes appear as dark spots, the nose and mouth as lines forming an angle. Butting down this rhythmical sequence as a musician would write notes and chords, the result is a living creature. One marvels how the eyes wear such an expression, the mouth offers such tenderness and melancholy. The artist says he does not know; that the arrangement of these lines, planes and colored spots was what interested him.

But Deutsch is not given to intellectualizing about his work. He erects no esthetic theories about his pictures. But he is inspired to work by esthetic emotion, not by any desire to tell a story, copy nature or illustrate a literary theme. The strong human flavor that pervades his work is the unconscious expression of a thinking, feeling, human being.

By working and waiting the recognition of his fellow artists and a few perceptive collectors has come to Deutsch unsought. When the larger world asks to see his art he has no chaff to cull through for kernels. Only fine, representative work still exists.

The waiting was not always easy because Boris is essentially a painter. There was commercial art work and set designing for the motion pictures and all the time the chain of images coming up unpainted. He even took the few dollars he had saved and put them all into making a film of his own. As a whole it was not a success, the money gave out, but there were passages in that picture of an imaginative beauty unknown to the screen.

There have been nights when he would cover sheet after sheet of paper with as many as fifty drawings in black and white or water colors, sometimes squeezing the color directly from the tubes on to the paper, and every one of these drawings would be a fresh, original conception. This man's drawings alone furnish a mine of artistic ideas and experiences.

Reviews and News of Art

Fredericks is Fantasist

Joseph Paget-Fredericks, native of Berkeley, whose drawings and designs are being shown now in the lounge at Bullock's Wilshire, preserves to an unusual degree the poetry of an imaginative child but he combines it with a fastidious technique. Fairies are still real for this dancer-painter but he knows their anatomy and every last detail of their gossamer garments.

Based on a calligraphic line his pictures or his dance costumes—done for such celebrities as Pavlowa or Ida Rubinstein—blossom into extravagant clouds of color. In the black and white pen drawings—made to illustrate his own poems—he delights in delicate workmanship and shows rare skill in drawing children so charming that they deserve to hob-nob with fairies. Many of the pictures are borrowed for this very complete showing from private collections in America and Europe.

School Shows and Courses

Now is the season when the various art schools of the city hang up selections of the past term's work for public view. The Otis Art Institute's annual exhibition is at the Los Angeles Museum, the Chouinard School of Art still has much of its work on view in its own building and so has the Stickney Art School in Pasadena. At the Art Guild Academy are exhibitions of work by instructors in interior decoration and applied design. N. W. Wilcox and B. Haddon Canwright. All of these schools are offering summer courses in the various branches of fine and applied arts and so is the Academy of Modern Art. The School of Architecture at U.S.C. and the Art Department of U.C.L.A., both offer special summer courses in fine art. The Douglas Donaldson Studio, Hollywood, opens special summer courses in art practice and principles on July 7, while the Art Students' League of San Pedro opens summer session on the same date under many instructors.

George Schreiber Exhibits

Good direct painting and personal poetry distinguish the pictures by George L. Schreiber, showing this month at the Santa Monica Public Library. Thirty-four examples are offered, including portraits, figure studies, landscapes, marines and decorative tiles. Schreiber's landscapes have atmospheric charm and often strong design. Of the figure pieces the portrait study of a young woman, No. 15, the self-portrait and the head of a baby, "Joan," are especially satisfying. Occasionally the landscapes are trite but those like "Convict Lake" and "Glimpse at Beaumont" have fine quality. There is also an impressive night scene at a station, darkness given light and form by the rays of a locomotive headlight.

Jules Pascin Dead

A lurid story in the Chicago Tribune describes the suicide and former life in Paris of Jules Pascin, famous modern painter, whose funeral took place in the French capital the 7th inst. According to the story Pascin led an Arabian nights life, killing himself because he had tasted all the joys of life at 45 years of age. Famous modernists attended his funeral. His wife, Herminie David, the artist, is said to have collapsed at the grave. Born a Bulgarian Jew, Pascin became a naturalized American citizen at the outbreak of the war. He was a sensitive draughtsman and his figure paintings are keenly sought. Two water colors by Pascin are included in the Preston Harrison collection of modern French painting owned by the Los Angeles Museum.

Owens, Hays Collaborate

Small but lively sketches of scenes in the movie studios, the work of Charles Hamilton Owens, staff artist on the Los Angeles Times, illustrate an article by Will H. Hays on "The Cinema of Tomorrow," which appears in the Ladies' Home Journal for July.

Northern Artist Here

George Kegg of San Francisco, well known as advertising illustrator, draughtsman, actor and creator of the marionettes that bear his name, has come to Los Angeles where he intends to settle. Kegg has developed a clever type of illustration in lithographic crayon, some examples of which will shortly be seen in The Times Roto section.

Pollock Back from East

Back from New York, where he has been working and studying with Thomas Benfon for three years, comes Charles Pollock who previous to that time was a member of The Times art staff. He has already done a series of well composed water colors on the desert at Victorville since his return.

Southland Girls Win

Miss Bertha Selkinghaus of Los Angeles, a senior at the University of California at Berkeley, and Miss Elinor Youngston, formerly a student at Pomona College, have been awarded prizes for the best designs to be used to decorate the walls of the gymnasium in the new high school at Berkeley. The designs were chosen from about forty submitted by the members in the class in advanced design under Prof. Eugene Neuhaus.

To Teach Landscape

Ernest Browning Smith announces a summer course in outdoor landscape painting now forming at his studio, 2416 Loma Vista Place at Glendale Boulevard, Los Angeles. Smith, who has won a number of prizes in western exhibitions, announces he will teach the color and light practice of the impressionists.

Portia Little of 1208 South Central avenue, Glendale, was enjoying a bath about five years ago. Idly she commenced to carve a piece of soap with the handle of her toothbrush and it became a head. This year she gained an honorable mention in the senior class of the Procter & Gamble national soap sculpture competition. "And $10," said Portia, "with which I bought a pair of shoes." Encouraged she is now a modeling student at the Stickney School of Art, Pasadena.

"Horses," by Georges De Chirico

This spirited painting, by the Italian artist of Paris, who has proved a high light of the recent New York and London art seasons, has just been acquired from the Reinhardt Galleries, New York, by a Los Angeles collector.

ADAMS FAMILY REGNANT

James Truslow Adams Makes an Enlightening Study of Our Second President and His Descendants

THE ADAMS FAMILY. By James Truslow Adams. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

A book that every American should read and ponder is "The Adams Family," by James Truslow Adams, who is himself unrelated to them. In it we have epitomized the trend of American ideals and interests through five generations.

We see John Adams living in almost farmer simplicity, believing in freedom and equality and the right to happiness; John Quincy Adams inheriting these beliefs and becoming radical in their defense while himself a polished, scholarly gentleman with aristocratic tastes; Charles Francis Adams, the diplomat in whom the aristocratic strain is predominant, but who is still a fighting Adams immersed in public affairs; and Henry Adams, tired, disillusioned, feeling an alien in the country his forbears had made. Then comes Charles Francis Adams III, nephew of Henry, multi-millionaire yachtsman and banker, who still has enough of the old Adams in him to accept the position of Secretary of the Navy in President Hoover's Cabinet.

The Adams line is cited by the author as the one American family that for generation after generation has combined high character and intellect and that has "made contributions of the highest order to our history and civilization." John Adams, the fifth generation in America of a respected farmer family, suddenly shot into prominence, after promising to be merely a country lawyer. Why he was gifted far above his ancestors James Truslow Adams is unable to say. He says:

"All we shall see is that without warning, like a fault in the geologic record, there is a sudden and immense rise recorded in the psychical energy of the family. For a couple of generations this new energy finds itself in harmony with the greater lines of force acting upon human society; then, with little diminution in itself, its line of direction fails to continue to coincide with those of the greater forces driving human society along its path."

The author divides his volume into four parts, one for each generation covered. John Adams possessed certain traits that were to persist throughout, with strange modifications according to the period in which each lived. Among these traits are mentioned capacity for independent judgment, assumption of sole responsibility and courageous action. These have placed the family apart from mere intellectuals as well as from ordinary statesmen. John Adams was ungracious, alert to discover enmities, suspicious of the world's intentions toward himself. This suspicion deepens into a complex, which is shown to have been possessed by all his descendants.

The itch for writing has been an Adams trait from the beginning. John and John Quincy kept voluminous diaries. Here they revealed themselves in a way to make all future biographers rejoice. Mr. James Truslow Adams makes full use of these and thereby is able to interpret the character and conduct of his subjects as well as to follow them in action.

For John Quincy Adams he has high enthusiasm. That his statesmanship was clear-headed is proven; so, too, his disinterested leadership in one unpopular cause after another. That John Quincy was a gentleman and a scholar as well as a somewhat fanatical aristocrat leading the mob is likewise shown. In Charles Francis Adams the family produced at last "a perfectly balanced mind," one admirably fitting him for his post of Minister to Great Britain during the Civil War, where he was able to keep that nation from recognizing the Confederacy.

The fourth generation is four-branched. There is Henry, the frustrate, ironic artist whose autobiography published in 1918 after his death started our intelligentsia on their protesting way; John Quincy II, Charles Francis II and Brooks are the other three. They are all sons of the first Charles Francis. Today the head of the family is the son of John Quincy's grandson, John Quincy. He is our Cabinet member.

James Truslow Adams in this volume wins fresh laurels as a historical writer of unbiased scholarship who brings a fresh point of view and a penetrating analysis to his work. He is, as everybody knows, the author of "The Founding of New England," "Revolutionary New England," "New England in the Republic" and of other works, of which "Our Business Civilization" appeared last year.

A Group of Recent Books

THE OTHER BULLET. By Nancy Barr Mavity. Doubleday, Doran & Co., New York.

Nancy Barr Mavity, successful author of detective stories, has a new one. It is "The Other Bullet" and is published by the Crime Club, embraced in the Doubleday, Doran activities. Peter Piper, who has appeared before, is the clever newspaper man on his vacation who walks into a crime. Don Mortison, ranch manager for Max Everett, is shot while sitting in his cabin at night. Mrs. Everett is found with the gun and confesses. Investigation shows that three shots were fired; only two from the Everett gun. It becomes plain that Everet had good reason for taking a shot at the ranch manager and so did a number of others. For he had been a devastating man with the ladies, ruthless and fickle.

Peter sets out with the noncommittal sheriff to discover who fired the other bullet. He succeeds. But not until there's a trial, with plenty of mystery. Mrs. Mavity writes well and she has the skill to make her newspaper reporter, her sheriff, the penitent wife and all the others vastly diverting.

SCARFACE. By Armitage Trail. Edward J. Clode, New York.

In this gangster story we follow the fortunes of Tony Guarino, later known as Carmonte or Scarface. The book is packed with action, much of which would stretch one's credulity but for the fact that even the most melodramatic incidents have been outdone in the news stories coming out of Chicago in the last year or two.

Tony's fleeing after his first killing, his joining of the army, his exploits at the front and his final return to his lady love, only to find her consoled by another, are set forth in rapid-fire English.

The incidents are reminiscent of the exploits of Scarface Al Capone, with enough difference to make them fictional.

A First Novel

Llewelyan Powys, who is well known as the author of "Ebony and Ivory," "Black Laughter," and "The Cradle of God," has turned his hand to fiction. His first novel, "Apples Be Ripe," is published by Harcourt, Brace & Co.

HIGH SPOTS IN NEW BOOKS

BY LILLIAN C. FORD

That there are few distinguished novels being published this year becomes apparent when one tries to make a list. I notice that the "Yale Review" makes one in its most recent issue, that for example, included are Gide's "The Immoralist," Anne Green's "The Selbys," Richardson's "Australia Felix" and "The Way Home," Roberts's "The Great Meadow" and Walpole's "Rogue Herries." To this list I would add "Gallows' Orchard," by Claire Spencer; "The Trader's Wife," by Rex Kenyon Mackenzie; "North of Suez," by William McFee, and "All the Yesterdays," by H. M. Tomlinson. "The Woman of Andros," by Thornton Wilder, has been out three months, but it remains the most distinguished novel of the year thus far.

S. S. Van Dine

The most recent list of best sellers leads off with the latest Van Dine, "The Scarab Murder Case." If it did not have so much [illegible] from the Britannica it would be more "interestin'." Irving Bacheller's new book, "A Candle in the Wilderness," and Zane Grey's "The Shepherd of Guadaloupe" are on the list. Both have good [illegible].

The most engaging piece of fiction I've read this week is "The Hound of Florence" by Felix Salten, author of "Bambi." It is translated by Huntley Paterson and published by Simon & Shuster. It is a fantasy in which Felix Salten tells with entire plausibility of Irma Grassi, who on alternate days was the form of a dog. This was the result of a hasty wish. Irma, a poor Italian living in Vienna during the late Renaissance, longs to go to Florence. He watches the Archduke

FILM VACATIONS MARKED BY 'IFS'

...Irene Delroy, the newly arrived musical comedy star, says "if" a vacation comes along, she will go to New York, but in the meantime she is enjoying short trips through California—Palm Springs, Arrowhead, Agua Caliente, etc. Leslie Howard, stage star of "Berkeley Square" and here making "Outward Bound," sails for England July 10. His children await him there. Gladys Dell, Al Jolson's leading lady in "Big Boy" and who is also in "Kitty Bellairs," considers Catalina Island good enough for anyone. She snatches week-ends there frequently. The Jimmy Gleasons find their swimming pool in their own back yard sufficient entertainment. Dorothy Lee says her Santa Monica cottage is all she needs, too. Hugh Trevor has a thirty-foot launch and will cruise around in Mexican waters. Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey, the comedians, have alarming plans. Bert will spend the summer in a prize fight camp and learn the art of self-defense. Woolsey will shut himself in a back room with a gag book.

Greta Garbo is enjoying Yosemite right now, but returns next week to work all summer, as is Anita Page. Conrad Nagel, Grace Moore and Laurence Tibbett can see no holiday in sight. Lon Chaney will take his wife and son to a high Sierra camp and fish for trout. Johnny Mack Brown will take the wife and new baby back to Dothan, Ala., and show the family. Kay Johnson is due back from New York. Bill Haines hasn't quite decided between Europe and Mexico. Buster Keaton leave for Europe next week, and will buy a car and tour England, France, Germany and Austria. Buster is going to polish up his German for a new picture. Marie Dressler is in Europe now and comes back to work next week. So is Ernest Torrence. Dorothy Jordan goes to Idyllwild. Lewis Stone and Cecil De Mille both have yachts and will cruise up and down the Coast. Wally Beery goes to his Silver Lake lodge by plane at frequent intervals. Mary Doran has a cottage at Manhattan Beach. Bessie Love is visiting friends at Burlingame. Robert Montgomery is going to Big Bear.

PRODUCTION AWAITED

Mary Nolan has all her plans for Italy . . . but waits upon production. John Boles says he has longed for a summer by the sea all his life, and now for the first time acquires a new cottage at Malibu and will spend the summer singing to the waves. Glenn Tryon has to wait until November 5 but then he will hie him to Mogollon Mount in New Mexico, penetrate forty miles by burro into the mountains, take his grand new gun along and bring back at least one bear, and lots of wild turkey, geese and ducks. He gets six weeks for waiting.

Other wild western holidays will be taken by Gary Cooper, who retreats to his dude ranch in Montana; by Bob Armstrong who, having been on location in Wyoming, intends returning for pleasure; Richard Dix, who turns his location trip to Oklahoma into a holiday; Jean Arthur, who did the same in Alaska while "The Silver Horde" was being filmed; Ned Sparks, who goes to his mountain lodge in Quebec, and Eddie Foy, Jr., who has a cabin at Lake Placid in the Catskills. Eddie Quillan missed the golf tournament at Del Monte last year but means to get it in this. Nancy Carroll will get a September holiday at Big Bear. Claudette Colbert is on a trip around the world right now, on a tramp steamer, with her spouse, Norman Foster, a couple of famous artists, and some members of the Roosevelt family.

EUROPEAN ADDICTS

The Europe addicts are William Powell and Ronald Coleman, now in Paris, Maurice Chevalier, who intends to make Paris if they let him off long enough, and Constance Bennett, who was fetched back from New York on her way to the Riviera, and who will trot back directly when her present picture is finished. Helen Twelvetrees had the same experience after but one and a half days in New York. Richard Barthelmes will enjoy a four-months' tour through the Orient. Richard Arlen, who owns a yacht, will take his vacation with Jobyna cruising around Lower California. Mary Lewis has just returned from her European holiday. Buddy Rogers, Mary Brian and Kay Francis have all gone visiting the home folks in Kansas, Texas and New Orleans, respectively. William Boyd says it will be San Francisco if he can get away, and Chester Morris says he hopes it'll be New York if he can. Ann Harding says staying at home in their jolly new home and furnishing it up in company with hubby and the baby is vacation enough for her. Evelyn Brent will get to London, right after "Silver Horde" is completed. Ralph Harolde of "Dixiana" fame says he is going to see America first, via motor. Irene Dunne plans two weeks in New York, Jeanette Macdonald also sighs for New York if they let her off long enough, but otherwise will content herself with local charms. Billie Dove says she is just beaching, golfing, tennising for a spell and wallowing in liberty.

Ruth Chatterton's vacation is a doubtful quantity, but she weekends pretty regularly at Malibu . . . and besides, there's the new Beverly Hills home to revel in. Reginald Denny has a bungalow at Arrowhead and is there now.

HIGH SPOTS IN NEW VOLUMES

set out with his suite for that city and wishes he were the Archduke's dog. In a moment the transformation takes place. Felix is the hound Cambyses. Inwardly he is unchanged; all his thoughts and feelings are the same. Thus he goes to Florence. On alternate days Cambyses disappears, while the poor wanderer Lucas is free to follow his whims.

In Florence Lucas becomes a student in the studio of Cesare Bandini. He puzzles his friends by his absence on alternate days. He falls in love with Claudia, a courtesan, who becomes the Archduke's mistress, although it is Lucas she loves.

Of the tragic complications that arise, with Lucas when in the form of Cambyses striking out against his enemies, Salten tells in a way those who like fantasy will enjoy. He writes, as he did in "Bambi," in a style that is always distinguished and that rises to poetic beauty on occasion. "The Hound of Florence" is fittingly illustrated by Kurt Wiese.

Felix Salten was in Los Angeles recently with the visiting European journalists. He is still young at 60, and is the author of some twenty books; he has received highest praise from Sigmund Freud, John Galsworthy, Heinrich Mann, Arthur Schnitzler, Gerhart Hauptmann, Ferenc Molnar and other European writers.

Lysistrata Modernized

"Lysistrata," that new acting version of the Aristophanes comedy on sex and war by Gilbert Seldes, now appears in book form, under the Farrar & Rinehart imprint. The comedy scored a success in both Philadelphia and New York. It is, indeed, considered quite the thing. Certainly Mr. Seldes has made a cleverly modernized version, "fluid and alive," "subtle and gross." One dramatic critic calls it "a beautiful, bawdy, belligerent satire," which wells describes it. The play was written in 411 B. C. during the ruinous twenty-year war from which Athens never recovered. Lysistrata's plan for ending war, it will be recalled, was to organize a woman's strike by which the soldiers returning on leave were to be welcomed, smiled upon at a safe distance but denied their rights as husbands and lovers. Mr. Seldes seems to be very much in earnest about all this. All we need is may be is a modern Lysistrata in order to compel the world's politicians to outlaw war.

Those who enjoy satire should not miss "She Knew She was Right." Jesse Lynch Williams finished this novel shortly before his death and in it he poured all his hatred of snobbery, pretension, hypocrisy. These he found rampant in women of great wealth who try to dominate their social groups. He singles out Hilda Harlan, head of her enormously wealthy clan. Hilda married a poor young professor and started in to give him a worth-while career. When husband proved intractable, Hilda became interested in another man who seemed in every way fitted to preside at the head of her table.

Mr. Williams is so thorough that he shows his arrogant woman in every phase of a complex life. He does not permit himself to be bitter over his snobs, maintaining instead a gaiety that beguiles while it does not conceal the satire. And on the last page everybody is left happy.

Bodenheim's Paean on Love

Maxwell Bodenheim has his own line, which he made plain in "Georgie May" and "Replenishing Jessica." He loves to celebrate sex-freedom in women, over which he is always ready to become rhapsodic. In "A Virtuous Girl" (Horace Liveright) he tells of Emmy Lou, who had the misfortune to be born to respectability in Chicago. By the time she was 17, she was well on the way toward freedom from the handicaps of her birth. How she attained it is told, ad nauseam, by the admiring Mr. Bodenheim, who even waxes sentimental in the telling.

To extol the joys of the week-end visit Newman Levy and John Held, Jr., present "Saturday to Monday." From the frantic last moment snatching of presents, through the difficulties of getting to the appointed place, the hypocritical welcome and the boresome activities, Norman Levy's verses and John Held's drawings leave nothing unreported. Some of it is amusing and some a little forced, but perhaps the sophisticated will like to place it on the bedside stand in the guest room. This is a Knopf book.

In "Grim Youth," John Held, Jr., does his own writing as well as the drawings. It is the younger generation that he portrays, not without malice. And what portrayals! He sees the prep school and college youth as opinionated, smug, bored and callous beyond all hope. These joyless prigs are shown as pursued by girls, whom they alternately pet and insult. In comparison with "Grim Youth" Tarkington's "Seventeen" becomes reading for the nursery.

It is with relief that one turns away to an old-fashioned, full-bodied novel such as "The Anvil," by Gustav Frenssen, translated by Huntley Paterson and published in America by Houghton Mifflin Company. Gustav Frenssen is a German writer who sees life as rich and good. He writes in a leisurely way of his country people, with a belief in their value and in truth and honesty and courage and all the old virtues. In his long story of Otto Babendiek, told in the first person, he has a complicated family connection through which Otto meets with cruelty and misunderstanding. Left an orphan by his blacksmith father who was a visionary, he is first taken in charge by an uncle who is plain ogre. He gets to school and to college, is forced into the war, and comes out to find a certain peace in writing.

Actors Feel Efforts Could Be Bettered

Most film actors, after seeing their performances on the screen, feel convinced that they could improve upon their efforts if they had the role to play over again, declares Lucien Littlefield, popular character comedian of the screen now portraying the featured character role in "The Great Day," which Harry Pollard is directing for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. This is because they see their character more clearly in its relation to the others, thus obtaining a more comprehensive idea of the complete drama, he argues.

The actor has only a superficial conception of his role when he knows of it merely from the lines given him and the scenes in which he plays, Littlefield points out. He can determine what the general characteristics of his man are, but there are many subtleties and nuances that can only be comprehended by a general familiarity with every line and every scene in the picture or play.

"Many scenes in which the actor does not appear may throw important light upon what type of fellow it is that he is playing," said Littlefield. "They may help him to understand the psychology of his role better, and thereby to give a more colorful and interesting characterization."

INDUSTRIAL GROWTH EVIDENCES PROSPERITY

DEVELOPMENTS FLOURISH IN CITY-TO-HARBOR STRIP

Past Year and Half Sees Seventeen Major, Hundred Lesser Industries Located, Plus Seven Extensions

BY JAMES L. DAVIS
Real Estate Editor

Developments in the metropolitan industrial district, that section of Los Angeles county lying between this city and the harbor area, in the past eighteen months have resulted in the establishment of seventeen major industries, erection of 100 or more other factories, and seven major extensions or mergers, all of which involve an investment of $43,-, an increase of $12,000,000 annually in pay rolls and added employment to 7500 persons.

Evidence of the industrial prosperity of the city and indicative of the soundness and magnitude of the expansion which constantly is taking place in this area and the relatively lessened industrial depression here as compared to other sections of the country, is the resultant increase in manufacturing output which is estimated in excess of [illegible] annually.

CITY TO HARBOR STRIP

The metropolitan industrial district extends along a strip approximately three miles wide and twenty miles long from the harbor district area into the business core of the city. A line drawn from the intersection of Vernon and Santa Fe avenues through Walnut Park, Lynwood and Compton direct to the harbor would split the center of the twenty-mile strip. Factories in this area are served by the Southern Pacific Railroad with railway sidings to every part of the adjacent area.

H. H. Scott, freight traffic manager of the Southern Pacific Company, who is in close touch with the operation of this section, declares that the expenditures made locally for both new and augmented industries run high into the millions of dollars each year.

"The construction of new factories, laboratories and other buildings required to house incoming industries has furnished employment to every one of Los Angeles building trades workers and is adding to the value of industrial acreage located in the metropolitan industrial district," he declares.

LOCATIONS MEET NEEDS

"Considerable savings in freight charges are being made by locating plants of heavy tonnage requirements midway between the business district and the harbor, with the result that this locality is becoming more and more the principal location for new heavy type industries coming to the city.

"To the larger industries producing sufficient tonnage to justify the docking of ocean-going steamers at their own wharf, the harbor end of the industrial district provides ideal facilities. Fortunately, the existing harbor facilities can be greatly extended at a reasonable cost to accommodate many more such industries, the coming of which may confidently be anticipated."

The increase of industry of this district during the last eighteen months is reflected in the metropolitan district by such major undertakings as the new plants of the Ford Motor Company, the Agricultural Porcelain Company, the Phosphate Company, the Pacific Borax Company and Procter & Gamble.

BUILDING EXPANSION

Record has already been broken by the new $5,000,000 Procter & Gamble soap plant, which will be in operation within twelve to fifteen

Factory Expansions Increase City's Pay Roll Total

Ground was broken recently for the $5,000,000 plant of Procter & Gamble, soap manufacturers, which will be completed in approximately one year and will employ 1000 workers. The Firestone Rubber Company factory typifies expansions of Los Angeles industrial concerns. The Pioneer Paper Company plant, with spur tracks to the Southern Pacific Railroad, is characteristic of developments in the metropolitan industrial district. Original capacity of this plant has been doubled.

APARTMENT PROPERTY PURCHASED

Improvements Planned by Company for Four-Story Structure

The Lincoln Leasehold Corporation has purchased through Jim Hool, agent for the company, the Blasdel Arms Apartments, located at 711 South Rampart. The property is 60 by 140 and is improved with a four-story Class B apartment building containing forty apartments of singles, doubles and bachelors.

The company will expend approximately $6000 in improvements to the property. The purchase price was $130,000. David E. Thompson, broker, was associated in the transaction.

FACT AND COMMENT

The present stability of building conditions in Los Angeles is indicated in figures just made available on home capacities provided during the present year and in the gradual decrease in office-building vacancies during the past three years.

During the year 1923, the greatest building year in Los Angeles' history, apartment-houses and residences erected provided for 43,842 families. With three and one-half persons reckoned per family this building provided accommodation for 153,447 persons, far in excess of normal requirements.

Since that time construction work has declined, largely because of the absence of speculative building. Strange as it may seem the city's greatest building year occurred at the period of highest material and labor costs.

For the past three years occupancy figures of office build-

Miss Muriel E. Nicolais, 18 years of age, architectural student, 686 South Vermont avenue, $400 prize for first award in the professional class.

Gene Brockow, 481 North Canon Drive, Beverly Hills, $150 second award in professional class.

Mary E. Murray, 5428 El Verano avenue, Eagle Rock, $300 first award in nonprofesional class.

Mrs. Florence Rathburn, 1253 Berkeley street, Santa Monica, $100 second award in nonprofessional class.

"The competition was inaugurated the latter part of May with the idea of bringing out the latest ideas of architects and architectural students in the design of model kitchens, and to interest housewives and others in expressing their ideas of what model kitchens should be.

That the aims of the contest were realized is shown in the statement of Harold C. Chambers, president of the Southern California Chamber of the American Institute of Architects and chairman of the jury of award, who declared that "the jury feels that most excellent results have been obtained by this competition and that many of the ideas exemplified by the winning entrants and those receiving honorable mention are worthy of careful study by owners and architects interested in the problem of proper design and equipping this most important room in the house."

All plans submitted in the contest are on display in the exhibition rooms in the Architects Building.

The jury of award included Harold Chambers as chairman; Mrs. Harry W. Michael, representing the Los Angeles Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Maybelle Wyman, chef of The Times; Miss M. L. Schmidt, president of the Architects Building Material Exhibit, and William S. Kienhoix, director of vocational education of the Los Angeles Board of Education. Architect W. L. Risley acted as professional adviser to the jury of award.

"There was a full attendance of the jury and every design was carefully considered by them," Chairman Chambers reported. "A great number of fine plans were entered in both classes and required a great deal of hard work and discussion to arrive at decisions, but when these were made they were unanimous.

"It is interesting to know that the first prize in the professional class is awarded to an 18-year-old girl, Miss Muriel E. Nicolais, who graduated from Beverly Hills High School last February. This was an equally big surprise to the jury as Larchmont Boulevard shows activity this month in leases, brokers report. Following an announcement by Coldwell, Cornwall & Banker of a lease with the Greater Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, amounting to $45,000, R. T. Tustin, Jr., broker, announces leases in the same block, south of Beverly Boulevard, with Piggy Wiggly, the Earl Hardware Company, and J. A. Dunaway Jewelry Company, totaling $120,000.

According to Tustin there are several more leases soon to follow in this district, which extends the one block, from Beverly Boulevard south to First street.

Realty Group Uses Course

Real-estate brokers and salesmen constitute the largest group in the registration for the real-estate courses offered by the University of Southern California through its correspondence study department, 1306 Transportation Building, according to S. H. Van Dusen, who is in charge of the department.

Fifty other occupations are represented among the students enrolled, with property owners forming the second largest group.

Dealing specifically with California practices in real estate the correspondence study course covers general real estate, conveyancing, real estate for salesmen and appraisal of property values.

BENEFITS FOR SOUTHLAND SEEN IN NEW TARIFF LAW

Crop Sale Stabilization, Larger Cultivation and Increased Trade With Western States Predicted

BY CHARLES C. COHAN

The new tariff law will materially benefit Southern California industries and not raise the cost of living here, trade experts believe.. Outstanding benefits expected for the Southland are:

(1.) Stabilization of the crop sales, largely through the higher tariff on lemons. (Last year's aggregate crop value, $268,051,266; $86,755,023 in Los Angeles county.)

(2.) Larger cultivation and more profitable farm and orchard lands through increased crop sales. (Total crop area, 1,901,650 acres, with 268,412 of them in this county.)

(3.) Increased trade for Los Angeles with the Western States through their indicated increased buying power expected from new tariff schedules on cattle, wool, lumber, sugar and other commodities. (This reciprocal trade is expected to reach $300,000,000 in the near future.)

In connection with the cost of living, it is asserted that supply and demand and not duties primarily govern prices. It may be noted that this has been a national period of decreasing prices for many commodities. While doubtless pleasant enough for the consumer it may if carried too far react in lowered wage scales and reduced buying power, an unfavorable condition which the tariff, it is pointed out, tends to avert by broadening the market for many American products.

LEMON CROP AIDED

The ½-cent-per-pound tariff increase on lemons is regarded as a timely help to the citrus fruit industry here by the California Citrus League. While our orange crop ($81,328,631 F.O.B. value last year) has no marketing difficulties so far as import competition is concerned, the situation has not been so favorable for the lemon crop, which over a period of five years has averaged about $19,009,000 in value annually. The increase in the duty on lemons is expected to equalize the difference in the cost of producing and delivering lemons at seaboard markets as between California and Sicily, which is the chief source of lemons imported into this country. It further is believed that the American grower now will be able to sell as much as possible of his surplus production as fresh fruit and avoid the conversion of marketable fruit into by-products. It is contended that this converted fruit has been returning less than the cost of harvesting and handling.

The lemon situation likewise is helped by the new duty of 70 cents per gallon on lemon and lime juice which formerly came in free from Italy and from which citric acid and citrate of lime are made. Another benefit is the 5 per cent ad valorem increase on pectin, the lemon rind product that makes jelly jell.

GRAPE INDUSTRY HELPED

The production of a considerable list of grape by-products is regarded as one of the important ways to help the California grape industry, so that the 2-cent duty increase on tartaric acid is considered a timely aid in this direction.

A tariff measure provision, approved by the Prohibition Commissioner, permits high proof fruit spirits made in distilleries connected with wineries to be withdrawn for use under the same regulations that govern alcohols made for other than beverage purposes. This opens a large field for the production of brandied peaches, fruit and other products of like charac-

COURSES IN REALTY TO BE OFFERED

University Plans Two Classes for Salesmen During July

University of California at Los Angeles will offer two realty courses during the month of July. One course will deal with urban land values and the different methods used in their appraisal. Particular attention will be given to income analysis appraisals. This course will be given on Wednesdays and Fridays, beginning July 6, and will be completed during the month.

The other course is the regular twice-a-week monthly course dealing with the transfer and security of titles—deeds, mortgages, trust deeds, leases, etc., and while especially given for salesmen and brokers who are preparing for the examination, will be interesting to property owners as well. This course is given on Tuesdays and Thursdays, beginning July 8, and will also be finished during the month. Both courses will consist of eight two-hour sessions, from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Hillstreet Building, corner of Eighth and Hill streets, and will be in charge of Ivan A. Thorson. Inquiries may be made at the university registration office on the ground floor of this building, telephone VAndike 3401.

COMMUNITY TRANSFERS TABULATED

Totals Listed for Cities in Metropolitan Section Outside Los Angeles

With 390 transfers of property, Long Beach held first place in the survey. Glendale ranked second both in activity and in realty financing with 166 deeds and 152 trust deeds and mortgages involving the sum of $638,443. This was an increase of $162,729 over its realty financing during the first half of May.

In Pasadena there were 141 transfers of property during the two-week period and 116 trust deeds and mortgages involved the sum of $482,535.

In Burbank, eighty-two deeds were filed and realty financing amounted to $93,813. Deeds in Beverly Hills numbered seventy-three and trust deeds and mortgages were valued at $368,635. There were sixty-one deeds filed in Santa Monica, sixty-five trust deeds and mortgages and $430,766 involved.

Lease Closed Provides Entry for Auto Park

The value of a location on Spring street in the financial district for an auto park was shown last week by the closing of a five-year lease on premises at 536 South Spring street, according to R. L. McCourt, vice-president of W. Ro Campbell Company, business and industrial property brokers. Leasor is Laura C. Hutchinson and lessee is Andrew Pansini, who operates the Savoy Auto Parks. Pansini operates the auto park on Main street directly in the rear of his new location, which will permit a Spring street entry. The lease was for a period of five years, with a total reported rental of $60,000. R. Q. Brown of the sales and lease division of the Campbell Company handled all negotiations.

Harbor, Now Operating on Paying Basis, Eliminates All Further Tax Expenditures

PUBLIC UTILITY ENTERS ON REVENUE-PRODUCING ERA

Expenditures and Achievements of Twenty-Year Period Reviewed by Board President

Los Angeles Harbor, now operating on a paying basis, will take care this year not only of all operating expenses but also of interest and sinking fund including the payment of bonds coming due, President Allen of the Board of Harbor Commissioners announced yesterday.

"In less than twenty years Los Angeles has built the second greatest port in America, and while maintaining comparatively low harbor charges, has put this great public utility on a paying basis as a going concern," Allen declared.

"Through the expenditure of a little less than $30,000,000 it has created property worth more than double that amount and has also saved its people several hundred million dollars in freight rates during this period.

"But over and above all of these achievements it has made possible the building of a great world metropolis which would have been impossible without the existence of this harbor. In the last ten years, a new city, larger than Hamburg, Germany, which is world famous for its commerce, has been built within thirty miles of the harbor.

AID TO INDUSTRY

"Los Angeles Harbor has made possible the development of the great oil industry of Southern California, for without the harbor through which to ship petroleum products in various forms to the ends of the earth, the oil industry could not have been developed with anything like such rapidity.

"The harbor has made it possible to bring lumber here from the Northwest at a price which has enabled the building industry to go forward.

"The existence of the harbor has made possible the building here of four great tire factories, for without the harbor, shipping could not bring cargoes of crude rubber from across the Pacific. The harbor also is responsible for many other industries.

EXPENDITURES OUTLINED

"When the harbor towns of Wilmington and San Pedro voted to go into the larger city in 1909, Los Angeles agreed to spend $10,000,000 within ten years in harbor development. The first bond issue of $3,000,000 was voted in 1910, but because of legal complications, expenditures thereunder did not begin until 1912. An additional bond issue of $2,500,000 was voted a little later. Then the World War came on which made it impossible to issue bonds and harbor work was carried on with great difficulty. At one time it was necessary for the Harbor Department to go to the City Council and borrow $80,000 to install a cotton compress in order to make Los Angeles a cotton concentration point and export market. Later, this money was paid back from harbor bonds, and this was the start of the cotton business in Los Angeles.

"However, the pledge to expend $10,000,000 in harbor improvements within ten years from 1909, while not kept literally, was met sufficiently to meet harbor needs at the time, but along in 1923 commerce grew so rapidly that harbor facilities could not be built fast enough to keep up with its demands. Then it was that the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce came forward with a proposal to vote $15,000,000 in bonds, which it was thought would be sufficient to carry the harbor forward for many years to come.

MONEY NOT ALL SPENT

"It was not expected that this money would be expended in the immediate future and it is not all spent yet. In its negotiations with the finance committee of the City Council, the Chamber of Commerce harbor committee expressed its belief that this $15,000,000 would put the harbor on a paying basis, and with this in mind the men who expressed that belief seven years ago are much gratified with the present status. Much of that $15,000,000 is not yet revenue-producing, yet the harbor is now paying its way and is adding tremendously to the prosperity, not only of Los Angeles, but of the entire Southwest.

"All of the $30,000,000 of harbor bonds, however, have not been spent for revenue-producing facilities. When the mud flats which now comprise the harbor were first brought within the city limits there was comparatively little access to them, and the miles of paved highways had to be provided to make the harbor accessible. Ordinarily the cost of this would have been assessed against adjacent property, but one of the pledges of the greater city to the harbor communities was to expend its funds in making the water front accessible.

FUTURE ASSETS

"A large amount of dredging has been accomplished and land has been filled which will become a great asset in years to come, but which is not now revenue producing, yet all of this expenditure is charged up in the $30,000,000 on which the Harbor Department is now paying a return, in addition to meeting bond payments as they come due.

"Many miles of frontage also are now available for wharves, transit sheds, and other improvements, without the initial cost for dredging which had to be met in the early stages of harbor development.

"An especially gratifying feature is the fact that the harbor is not only paying all the cost of the total harbor expenditures, but it is at the same time keeping harbor charges down to the minimum. It was for this purpose that the city of Los Angeles went into the harbor business, and the low cost to ships and cargo at this port has been an element of considerable importance in making this port the great harbor that it is.

REVENUES SUFFICIENT

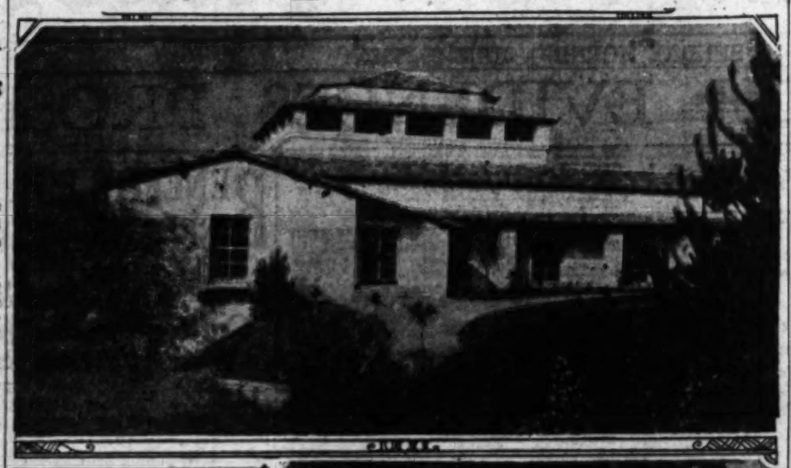
"Of the approximately $30,000,000 in bonds which have been voted, about $21,000,000 still remains to be paid and these will now be taken care of by the harbor itself. The city, therefore, has only $9,000,000 actually invested in harbor bonds and hereafter all sinking fund, interest and operating charges will be borne by the harbor revenues.

"As further extensions and improvements become necessary, additional bonds will have to be voted, but there is no doubt that they will now be paid off from harbor earnings and will create an asset for the taxpayers of the city rather than a liability.

"It must be stated that while the city has less than $9,000,000 invested in harbor bonds, during the early stages it was necessary to pay interest also from taxes, but that time has long since passed and in recent years interest charges have been paid from harbor earnings. Just how much this interest has amounted to, I do not know, but it is doubtful if the taxpayers have really put more than $12,000,000 into the harbor, counting both interest and bond payments.

"In return for this investment they now own a public utility which was carried on the city controller's books at $57,901,248.57 as of June 30, 1928, but which is actually worth to the city many times that amount and hereafter will necessitate no further tax expenditures."

County Branch Library Structure Dedicated



Two-Level Building Adjoins Park

Dedication exercises were conducted last week for the Palos Verdes library building, designed by Architect Myron Hunt and erected on a slope at Palos Verdes adjoining Farnham Martin Park. The structure is of typical California architecture and of two levels. The lower floor provides space for art displays and may be used as an assembly room. The second or main floor provides accommodations for children, a reading room and three rack levels for books. The structure is approximately 150 feet in length and was designed with the co-operation of Miss Vogelsang of the county librarian's office.

Units of the hotel being rushed to completion measure more than 900 feet along the ocean front, while an additional hotel wing, to be constructed, will increase this length another 175 feet. With the completion of the Cabanas Colony and hotel bungalows the various units of the hotel will extend one mile south of the company's private pier.

The units now being completed include public and private bath houses, garage, automobile parking areas, casino, main dining-room, breakfast room, hotel rooms, cabanas, hotel and private bungalows. The hotel will open with sixty rooms and forty-seven suites. In addition, there will be fifty cabanas, each accommodating four persons.

The casino and main dining-room will embrace 35,000 feet of floor space. The dining-room, with open-air beach terrace overlooking "the Bay of All Saints," will accommodate 500 guests. It follows Spanish-colonial lines.

Two patios in the rear of the hotel afford a mountain view. Hervey is managing director of the hotel, associated with James Woods and Henderson Stockton of Phoenix, as lessees.

ARTERY PLANS GIVEN IMPETUS

Board Receives Bids on Boulevard Bridge

Widened Road to Connect East Side, Beach

Improvement to Stimulate Industrial Activity

Giving impetus to plans for making Washington Boulevard a 100-foot artery for its entire length of approximately eighteen miles, bids were received Wednesday by the Board of Public Works for the $350,000 Washington Boulevard bridge over the Los Angeles River, and construction operations are scheduled to begin within sixty days.

The bridge, which will be 310 feet in length and seventy-one feet in width with a fifty-six-foot roadway, will link the industrial section of the East Side with the residential areas of the West Side and the Venice district. Together with other improvement plans for the thoroughfare, it will make Washington Boulevard another cross-town artery that is expected to bear heavy traffic, relieving Ninth, Seventh, First and other streets.

SCHEDULE OUTLINED

Within the next thirty days the contract for construction of the bridge and approaches will be let and terms will call for start of work twenty days afterward, with completion of the project set for 200 days thereafter. The city already has appropriated $350,000 for the improvement, $50,000 of which has been expended for purchase of land for the approaches. The contractors awarded the job are expected to keep a crew of about 100 men steadily at work during construction operations.

Specifications for the bridge, which was designed by the bridge and viaduct division of the City Engineer's office under supervision of Merrill Butler, call for a structure rising twenty feet above the river bed. The west approach will have a length of 226 feet and a twenty-foot width of asphaltic concrete. The east approach, extending to Soto street, will be 800 feet long and will have a forty-foot asphaltic concrete pavement.

Materials to be used include 6975 cubic yards of concrete, 2390 tons of asphaltic concrete, 830,230 pounds of reinforcing steel, 12,364 square feet of four-inch rock and oil shoulders and 696 piles, each sixteen feet long.

AIM OF ASSOCIATION

Since 1922, when the Washington Boulevard Association first was organized, its members and officers have been working toward making the artery a 100-foot thoroughfare for its entire length, reaching from Venice on the west to Telegraph Road on the east, it was explained yesterday by Clarence Urban, president of the organization.

Washington Boulevard now is 100 feet in width from Figueroa street to Venice. East from Figueroa street to Alameda street condemnation proceedings virtually are completed for a twenty-foot strip of land on the north side of the street and work is expected to start soon on widening that section to 100 feet. Proceedings are under way to acquire necessary rights of way from Alameda street east to the river for a 100-foot roadway.

The county road department will handle improvement of Washington Boulevard from Soto street east, and these proceedings are well along now, it was said yesterday. Holabird avenue, starting at Mines avenue and extending to Telegraph Road and beyond, already has changed its name to Washington Boulevard to tie in with the general improvement plan.

Completion of the eastern portion of Washington Boulevard is expected to stimulate industrial activity of considerable magnitude, according to the association officials.

SUMMER FIRE WARNING ISSUED HOME-OWNERS

A warning to home-owners, declaring that with the approach of the summer season, special care should be exercised to prevent costly fires, has been issued by the modern homes division of the Tri-Guaranty Building Company. The communication declares that a third of all fire losses is in dwellings.

Sound construction of buildings will reduce the chances of fire, it is pointed out, since the majority of fires can be traced to defective chimneys and heating apparatus, combustible roofs, incorrect wall framing and faulty wiring. The careless use of matches and burning tobacco are major causes.

When a small fire has just started it can be put out easily, if prompt action is taken. Dry grass on vacant lots adjoining buildings should be burned under competent supervision, in accordance with city fire department rules. Every home should be equipped with a fire extinguisher always kept for instant use in one known place, the warning further declares.

GIN TO BE INSTALLED

VISALIA, June 28. (Exclusive)—A cotton gin is to be installed in Visalia by the California Cotton Credit Company and is ready for operation by the end of July, according to officials of the company. This gin will be the first established near Visalia and will be brought here from Brawley.

In order better to understand the arrangement and location of business institutions and industries in practically any large city, it may be well briefly to note certain facts regarding the use-development of every growing city.

As a city develops, it spreads out in a pattern, more or less symmetrical, according to the use to which the land is put. It was the custom, and still is, for small towns to put their Courthouse in the center of the town, only to see the city grow away from it instead of growing around it as was expected.

The principal retail stores, banks and other financial institutions lead the way in establishing the center of the downtown business section. Next to them come the wholesale, light manufacturing, warehouse and heavy manufacturing districts, approximately in the order named.

Scattered among the wholesale, warehouse and loft buildings will be found delapidated remnants of old houses and it is here where city slums are usually found if there are any. The slum districts are more prevalent in the large eastern cities located in the northern part of the country, where severe winters accentuate slum conditions.

GROWTH IRREGULAR

This growth seldom takes place in regular concentric circles around the retail and financial center. Oftentimes these layers of different use-developments take place on only one side of the original development. The topography, the presence of certain barriers, and the fact that there is always a tendency for the residential section to develop on the side from which the prevailing winds blow, and particularly if such development also means a movement toward a lake, the ocean, or the hills. Such has been the development, for example, in Los Angeles.

Retail sections in turn follow residences. Hence the principal retail section will invariably be found on the side where the major residential developments have taken place, if the industrial development has been on one side of the city only.

Thus the city in its development moves forward in one direction or another, not as a steam roller, which crushes everything before it, but seeks the line of least resistance, other things being equal. Quoting from Dr. Horace Clark's new book entitled, "Appraising the Home" (Prentice-Hall:)

LOS ANGELES EXAMPLE

"Los Angeles was laid out as a Mexican pueblo. There is a hill immediately west of the Plaza, extending north to the river, another natural boundary. American people prefer to live to the west of a business district, if possible, because the prevailing winds keep this section clear; but in Los Angeles this hill was in the way. The problem was finally solved by boring through it in several places, but not until values of real estate had been seriously disrupted by sporadic attempts to divert the natural movement. A group of retail merchants agreed to erect a number of fine retail stores below the hill and to the west of the old district, instead of to the south. This move intercepted traffic between the old retail district, and the rapidly developing westward residential district, and within five years an entirely new retail district was established, so far northwest of obstructing property holders that a portion of the value of property to the south was lost."

Family Capacity Construction, Modernization on Upward Trend

RESIDENCE, APARTMENT BUILDING ON INCREASE

Remodeling Permits For First Five Months of Year Nearly Half Total Number Issued During Period

Residence and apartment-house construction, together with the modernization and repair of dwellings, is on a steady upward trend, it was disclosed in figures released last week by the city building department to D. H. McDonald, secretary-manager of the building and modernization bureau of the Builders' Exchange.

Permits for single-family residences, doubles and apartment-houses totaled a valuation of $1,707,- in January. The following month they totaled $1,933,364 and in March were $2,659,946. April permits of this class amounted to $ while those for May climbed still higher to the total of $ Family capacity figures for the same period show that in January of this year accommodations either in houses or apartments provided for 886 additional families. The following month 777 more capacities were built while in March this increased to 902. In April 1133 family capacities were built and last month the figure rose to 1321, making a total of 4819 for the first five months of the year. The building department report estimated a total of three and one-half persons per family. On this basis provision has been made thus far this year for 4,866 persons.

PERMIT FIGURES

With a total valuation of $4,891,-, or about 14 per cent of the aggregate value of all building permits issued here during the five-month period, more than 6062 permits for the construction of additions and for alterations and repairs were issued from January to May 31 this year. The total value of all permits issued amounted to $38,663,258, according to records of J. J. Backus, city superintendent of buildings. The modernization permits represent almost 50 per cent of the total number of building permits issued, which was 12,628 for the five-month period. Of the 6062 modernization permits, 2143 were given for construction of annexes and additions while 3919 were for remodeling purposes.

FURTHER ACTIVITY SEEN

"The results of this investigation prove that the property owners of Los Angeles are rapidly becoming modernization-minded, if I may borrow an aviation term," said McDonald yesterday. "The advantages of remodeling an old building, are excluded from the standpoint of economy. Former surveys of the number of modernization permits indicate a steady increase in alterations and additions since 1920. It is expected that the remaining months of 1930 will see an almost spectacular activity in modernization, inasmuch as the property owners here are coming to the realization that material costs and skilled labor supply make this the opportune time to modernize their structures."

Figures show that during the first five months, apartment-house construction begun provides for 2121 families as compared to 2008 for the last five months of 1929. Dwelling construction, both singles and doubles, provided for 3696 families compared to 2776 the preceding five months. In August, September, October, November and December of last year the residences and apartments provided for 4786 families.

Reports for the past ten years show accommodations increased the city's housing facilities for families in the following manner: 1919, 5311; 1920, 10,842; 1921, 19,572; 1922, 28,053; 1923, 43,842; 1924, 29,894; 1925, 22,072; 1926, 20,017; 1927, 30,801; 1928, 21,081 and 1929, 15,234.

ings have shown steady improvement. In 1926 the vacancy figure was 12 per cent. In 1929 it was 11.6 per cent and at the present time the figure is 11.5 per cent, indicating the gradual absorption of not only the unoccupied space but also of space in the new structures built during this period.

As for homes and apartments, figures show the gradual increase in this type of construction this year. Beginning with January each succeeding month has provided more family capacities than the month previous yet the figure is not above the ability of the city to assimilate.

Los Angeles population growth now is such as to keep pace with present structural activity both in office-building lines and in family requirements.

Large Realty Sales

The sale of two limit-height buildings in the past two weeks, one in Hollywood and the other in downtown Los Angeles, involving sums running into the millions, may be taken as indicative of the activity in transfers of business properties here.

In one instance purchase was made by a company which has steadily been acquiring business frontage in Hollywood until it now is probably the largest individual holder of property in that section.

The downtown structure was acquired by a San Francisco capitalist who within the past year purchased another limit-height building in this city. This purchase shows once again the confidence of capitalists of other cities in Los Angeles realty.

Miniature Golf

So great has been the number of miniature golf courses built in this city that this enterprise threatens to fall of its own weight. Miniature golf courses are springing up wherever a vacant property can be found. Those who were pioneers in the endeavor have reaped a harvest but competition is now becoming so keen that it is doubtful if many now being built will show a sufficient profit to make the investment worth while before the fad loses its popularity.

The initial investment in such courses is no mean item, costs ranging from $4000 to $12,000 and $15,000. The activity has provided work for many artisans, but those contemplating entering this field of business might well conduct a survey of the community to learn if additional courses are needed.

Expansion Program Entails Large Volume of Construction Work

To the upper left is shown the recently completed La Jolla central office building of the Southern California Telephone Company, erected at the corner of Girard street and Torrey Pines Road and involving an expenditure of approximately $230,000. Nearly 2000 telephones are served from the building, the equipment in which is entirely of the dial type. The building also houses a business office. To its right is shown the Ojai building, with landscaped grounds, and in the center the San Bernardino long-distance office building. A building of similar design has just been finished at Pomona. To the lower left is pictured the garage of the Pasadena office on Hudson avenue, and to the lower right a recently completed Newhall building housing more than 500 vacuum tubes and equipment for maintaining clear transmission over lines between this section and Northern California.

BENEFITS SEEN IN TARIFF LAW

ter, according to an interpretation from Washington.

MORE ACREAGE FORECAST

The ½-cent increase in the duty on grapefruit is considered favorable to the progressing grapefruit industry here. Southern California ships from 1200 to 1500 carloads annually and with the wider market expected for this product from increased tariff protection, a larger acreage for grapefruit production is envisaged for Imperial Valley, Coachella Valley and in Arizona. There were 8258 acres utilized for grapefruit production in Southern California last year, an increase of 2718 from the preceding year, with a yield value of $2,547,417.

The 6½-cent-a-pound duty increase on dates, in packages less than ten pounds, is regarded as decidedly encouraging to the date-growing industry in this region. While approximately 2000 acres are devoted to date palm culture in the Southland, about 800 acres were producing last year, it is stated, the crop totaling approximately 1,500,000 pounds. The indicated encouragement to this industry is taken to presage increased date culture in the Coachella Valley.

The almond-growing industry, in which Southern California shares with localities to the north, stands to benefit considerably, it is believed, from the duty increase of 3-4 cent on unshelled and the 2½-cent raise on shelled almonds. Exceptional opportunity is seen for the demonstration of the California product's parity of quality in all respects with the best almonds Europe has to offer. The expected increase in California almond usage may be reflected in more extensive cultivation of this nut here, it is believed in some quarters.

Avocado culture may become considerably more extensive as the result of the change of the 35 per cent ad valorem duty to a tariff schedule of 15 cents per pound. Southern California grew 1731.2 tons of avocados last year worth $711,-547, an increase of more than $150,-000 from the preceding year.

While rice is grown now almost exclusively in the Sacramento and northern San Joaquin Valleys, the duty increase of 1-4 cent per pound for rice, paddy, and ½ cent per pound on cleaned rice, may cause an expansion of California rice cultivation as a factor in State-wide welfare.

OTHER BENEFITS

Encouragement is found for California pea growing in the 3-4 cent per pound tariff increase on dried peas and 2 cents on green peas, and especially for the bean growers in the 3 cents per pound increase in the tariff on green beans, and 1 1-4 cents on dried beans, according to agricultural authorities. Southern California produced $4,118,878 worth of peas and $15,-895,597 worth of all varieties of beans last year. Our onion crop last year had a value $1,876,207 and this industry, which has had to meet stiff competition from imports, is given the protection of an additional 1½ cents duty. Southern California lettuce has no import competition but is afforded a measure of future protection by the 2 cents per pound duty that replaces the 25 per cent ad valorem duty on celery, lettuce and cabbage, which is of immediate benefit to the celery and cabbage growers here, it is believed.

The Southland's prune production, largely in competition on the east coast with European imports, will be benefited by 1½ cents per pound tariff raise, while the fig industry here will be helped considerably, it is asserted, by the 3 cents tariff raise on figs, including fig paste and 5 per cent on preserved figs.

The walnut-growing industry is in a particularly favorable position. Since 1900, the California production has been increasing at the rate of about 6½ per cent annually and the excellent quality of this State's product has made it an easy winner over the imports from Europe and China, it is averred. The new tariff schedule, however, of an increase of 1 cent per pound for the unshelled and 3 cents per pound for the shelled varieties, may aid to the extent of keeping some of the more inferior foreign varieties off the American market and thereby help to stimulate the demand for walnuts, according to an opinion from the Walnut Growers' Association here. Southern California produced about $12,144,000 worth of walnuts last year.

Protection is given the olive industry here by the 2 cents per pound increase on olive oil (packages less than forty pounds) and 1 cent per pound increase on dried olives, but especially to the ripe olive industry which is becoming an important branch of olive cultivation here, by the tariff increase of 10 cents per gallon on the ripe variety.

The sugar beet industry in this region finds increased protection to the extent of a 3-10 cent tariff increase on sugar which is expected to react favorably to Ventura county and other Southland beet sugar manufacturing centers. Southern California produced $1,545,455 worth of sugar beets last year.

LIVING COSTS

Los Angeles is especially well situated as regards living costs. More than 90 per cent of its food supplies and many of its materials come from an empire of which this place is the chief trade center. The estimated $100,000,000 which it is indicated Los Angeles soon will be spending annually in the eleven Western States outside of California, will be met on their part with an estimated $200,000,000 worth of purchases here, chiefly for manufactured articles. If by reason of broadened markets through tariff protection any upward price trends develop in our purchases from them, they will be balanced in our sales to them for the same reason, trade economists believe. On the other hand, an increase of demand may actuate a greater supply such as in cattle, wool, lumber and other production, thereby stabilizing prices at nonoppressive levels in our purchases and at the same time doing this same favor for our customers in the way of manufactured commodities.

In every instance in which the new tariff law indicates an increase in the price of some locally used commodity, there is a decidedly favorable offset. For instance, while the new tariff law is not expected by R. D. Sangster, Chamber of Commerce industrial manager, to affect materially the manufacturing industry of the Pacific Coast, he specifies that a duty of $2 per long ton on silica sand for glass manufacture has a bearing on the glass industry here because Belgian sand, he says, is used exclusively by Pacific Coast manufacturers of clear or flint glass products. However, it is pointed out that this duty was adopted in the hope that it would stimulate the development of suitable raw material in California and Nevada.

OTHER FACTORS

The Los Angeles region bought 744,724 head of live stock from eleven Western States outside of California last year so that only the Mexican cattle brought here, less than 10 per cent of all our cattle purchases, is affected by the ½ cent per pound range of tariff raise on live cattle.

With Los Angeles making its own cement, brick and other supplies and customarily obtaining the great bulk of its lumber from Washington and Oregon (1,200,000,000 feet last year) the tariffs on such commodities are not apt to influence building costs here.

The character of our port commerce with Europe and the Orient, which we are foremost in developing, and the enormous amount of the intercoastal shipping, indicate, in the opinion of shipping authorities, an uninterrupted expansion of our harbor business.

BOULEVARD WORK TO START

Rush Construction Planned on "Five Finger" and Sunset Paving, Opening and Widening

Boulevard improvements involving the paving, opening and widening of eight miles of streets in the business center of Hollywood and the laying of sixteen miles of sewers and connections, together with three miles of storm drains, for completion of the $5,200,000 "five-finger" plan and the Sunset Boulevard development, will be underway in July with rush construction planned.

Already $4,200,000 has been expended in condemning land for the five-finger development and $900,-000 additional will be required for paving, sewerage, storm drains and ornamental lights, according to a survey made by G. R. Dexter president of the Bank of Hollywood, in connection with the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce.

Contracts for the Sunset improvement, which have been awarded at a figure of $563,647, call for paving and widening Sunset from Normandie to Havenhurst, a distance of 20,432 feet. A total of 39,120 lineal feet of sewer pipe and connections and 8821 feet of storm drains will be installed. Sunset will be widened to seventy feet for practically the entire stretch of the improvement.

Bids for the five-finger development, the most extensive project so far attempted in any single improvement district in Los Angeles, will be called for on July 1. Streets of a total length of 20,990 feet will be paved. The project calls for 44,-128 lineal feet of sewer and connections and 15,742 feet of storm drains. Cahuenga and Wilcox avenues, Yucca, Ivar and Cole streets figure in the widening plans. Ivar will be opened from Hollywood Boulevard south.

Sunset construction will be started ahead of the five-finger development in order that traffic congestion may be averted. With the completion of the two large improvements, designed to metropolitanize Hollywood, the screen city's traffic problem, which has reached an acute stage, will be temporarily solved, the survey states.

Change in Name Announced by Insurance Firm

Effective July 1 the name of Associated Life Insurance Company of California will be changed to Los Angeles Life Insurance Company, it is announced by M. Penn Phillips, president. The change of name was authorized by a special meeting of stockholders the 24th inst.

Home offices of the Associated Life Insurance Company were moved to Los Angeles from San Francisco three years ago at which time Phillips and Los Angeles associates acquired control of the company, and floor of the Spreckels Building at 714 South Hill street.

CREDIT BUREAU PETITIONED

PORTERVILLE, June 28. (Exclusive)—Petitions are being circulated in the business district in an effort to establish a credit bureau in Porterville. This move is being sponsored by the merchants' committee of the Chamber of Commerce, of which W. S. Allen is chairman.

Music College Building Under Way

Studios to Occupy Second Floor

Construction is under way, and is to be completed during August, on a $35,000, two-story brick building on Robertson Boulevard, near Gregory Way, Beverly Hills, for the Lavana College of Music, of which Dr. A. L. Seibert of Los Angeles is head. The dance, music and drama studios of the college, now located in Hollywood, will occupy the second floor, and stores the first. Durex System, Ltd., designed the building and is erecting it.

MANUFACTURING IMPETUS SHOWN

months and, at full capacity, will call for 1000 employees.

Another addition to the city's industrial expansion is the $500,000 plant of the California Sanitary Canning Company. This plant has 100,000 feet of floor space and employs, when in full operation, about 1500 workers.

The Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, within eight months of the completion of its Los Angeles plant, started new factory construction which duplicated the buildings and facilities of the original plant, while at the same time doubling the productive capacity of the local works. The addition to the Firestone plant was completed March 1, this year, at a cost of $5,000,000.

Acquisition of the furnaces, rolling mills and other industrial properties of the Columbia Steel Corporation and the Southern California Iron and Steel Corporation, the first by the United States Steel Corporation and the latter by the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, has put Los Angeles in the spotlight of national interest as a steel-manufacturing city.

INDUSTRIAL METROPOLIS

The influx of eastern capital for the establishment of Pacific Coast branch factories, either through the construction of entire new plants such as the Procter & Gamble factory, or through the purchase and improvement of existing facilities, as in the case of the steel properties just mentioned, indicates the predominant position Los Angeles has won as an industrial metropolis of national importance.

The Southern Pacific already has constructed the spur track to the site purchased by the Pacific Iron and Steel Company for the construction of that firm's $100,000 plant, upon which work has already commenced.

Due to the diversity of transportation facilities and the wide range of differing locations in which the physical characteristics and varying advantages of the land itself play a considerable part, Los Angeles can provide a satisfactory site for any industry which has economic justification for its existence.

Particularly is this true in relation to the so-called "heavy" industries which employ most labor and produce by far the largest portion of all manufactured products.

The fact that such industries are in growing numbers seeking locations in Los Angeles is the greatest assurance of prosperity that could be hoped for.

PLANTS LOCATED

New major industries locating in the metropolitan district during the past eighteen months are Agricultural Potassium Phosphate Company, Xylor Rubber Company, Pacific Iron and Steel Company, Worthington Pump Company, Universal Engineering Company, Philadelphia Quartz Company, W. J. Voit Rubber Company, Pacific Star Roof Company, Procter & Gamble Company, American Furniture Company, California Sanitary Canning Company, Chill Products Corporation, Pacific Coast Drop Forge Company, Merchants' Wholesale Grocery Company, Spartan Grocers, Inc., Arco Paint Company and Ford Motor Company.

Mergers and extension plants include United States Steel Corporation, Bethlehem Steel Corporation, Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, Pioneer Paper Company, W. J. Latchford Company, Safeway Stores, Inc., and American Can Company. The five last-named concerns have doubled capacities in the past eighteen months.

Plant Erection Contemplated by Ice Company

Plans for construction within thirty days of a building to house an ice-distributing plant and display room at Whittier Boulevard and Hillview avenue, have been announced by C. W. Braun, executive vice-president of the California Consumers, local manufacturers and distributors of ice.

A long-term lease has been signed for the property between the company and Rupert Blazic, owner of the property. The contract calls for construction to begin within ten days after the completion of the plans. The building will be 50x100 feet in size embodying modern construction and equipment.

The California Consumers Company has eight plants in the city similar to the one projected and one in Beverly Hills.

"The competition simply states that all designs must be suitable to a residence costing less than $30,000. The first prize is entirely suitable to the maximum cost allowed. The second prize winner is suitable to a much less expensive house. The jury was especially well satisfied with the completeness and general plan of the first prize in this class and in the much simpler type of the kitchen examplified in the second prize. The good taste and execution of design combined with a simple and workable plan are to be noted.

"The first honorable mention in the professional class goes to Rose Connor of 526 La Loma Road, Pasadena; second honor award, Lloyd Ruocco, 3845 Forty-seventh street, San Diego; third, Walter N. Rees, 822 Crestmore Place, Venice; fourth, G. DuBuque, 826 East Lake, Burbank; Fifth, Naubert Puff, 405 South Western avenue; sixth, Kenneth Messenger, 4152 Orange avenue, San Diego.

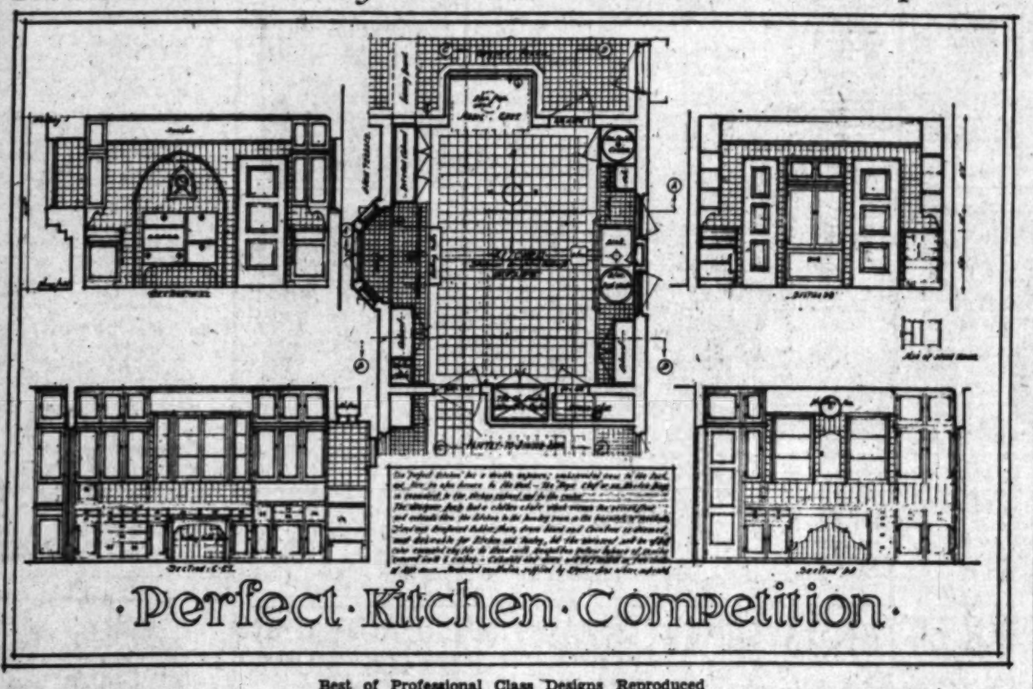
"Honorable mention in the non-professional class was given to designs submitted by Flora De Lullo, 272 South La Pere Drive, Beverly Hills; Mrs. Ozro John Smith, 629 West Forty-seventh street; Catherine I. Coons, 1274 Harper street, Hollywood; Rhoda Reynier, 944 North Oxford avenue; Mrs. Flora Brandt, 716 West Huntington Drive, Arcadia, and Mary Edna Porter, 3856 Linwood, Riverside.

"The jury is convinced that the best results can be obtained by an intelligent woman who knows the problems involved in arriving at a successful service solution, working with an architect who can express the solution in plan arrangement and selection of equipment. Plans submitted showed that many very excellent draftsmen had but imperfect conception of the problems involved. It was also evident that many of the designs submitted by housewives who were thinking only of the practical problem were little more than a box-shaped room with equipment arranged about the walls in good workable arrangements, to be sure, but with no regard for spacing of windows and doors, economy of installation, etc., and strange to say no regard for esthetic effect.

"In making the awards, the jury was advised as to the legality of the entrants by W. L. Risley, professional adviser of this competition who, however, in accordance with the competition code of the American Institute of Architects, had no votes in making selections."

One of the prize-winning designs will be followed in the kitchen design of a house to be erected in Sherman Oaks by Bundy & Albright, it was announced by Miss M. L. Schmidt, president of the Architects Building Material Exhibit. This home will be of early California type architecture designed by Arthur R. Kelly, architect. It is to be built immediately and will be open for inspection on completion so that the kitchen design may be studied. The prize-winning plan found most suitable to the house will be followed.

Girl Student's Entry Takes First in Kitchen Competition



Best of Professional Class Designs Reproduced

The above "perfect kitchen design, submitted by Miss Muriel E. Nicholais, 18-year-old architectural student and recent graduate of Beverly Hills High School, won first prize in the professional class of a competition sponsored by the Architects' Building Material Exhibit. "The perfect kitchen has a double exposure: unobstructed view to the east and through an open terrace to the west," says its designer. "The 'Magic Chef,' or an electric range, is convenient to the kitchen cabinet and to the cooler. The designer feels that a clothes chute which serves the second floor and extends through the kitchen to the laundry room in the basement, is invaluable. Steadman reinforced rubber floor, drainboard and counters is deemed most desirable for kitchen and pantry, but the wainscot will be of buff-color enameled clay tile to blend with Neapolitan yellow balance of Sanitas- covered walls and ceiling. Cabinets and doors will be finished in two shades of apple green. Mechanical ventilation is supplied by electric fans where indicated." All plans submitted in the contest are on display in the exhibition rooms of the Architects' Building Material Exhibit, Architects' Building, Fifth and Figueroa streets.

MAUSOLEUM FEATURED IN EXHIBITIONS

Work of Architect Will Be Displayed for Another Week Here

The work of Clarence L. Jay, Pasadena architect, is featured in an architectural exhibition that opened last week in the Architects' Building Material Exhibit at Fifth and Figueroa streets. The exhibition will be open to the public until July 7.

The exhibition consists of photographs of Sunnyside Mausoleum in Long Beach, Mountain View Mausoleum in Pasadena, Salt Lake Memorial in Salt Lake City, Red Bluff and Woodland, Cal., and several others.

As an added feature, the exhibition includes a large batik hanging done on velvet by Miss Caroline Miller. It was designed by Architect Jay and is to be hung in the chapel at Salt Lake City.

HOME FINANCING EXPLAINED

Small Down Payment Involves Inclusion of High Carrying Charges in Contract Price

BY GEORGE A. SCHNEIDER

Prepared for the California Building-Loan League

(Copyright, 1930, by George A. Schneider)

(This is the eighteenth of a series of articles designed primarily for the home owner of moderate means.)

There are a number of organizations in this State which specialize in the designing, financing and building of high-class homes upon lots already owned by the prospective home owner. Others build upon their own lots and sell the completed home. Some of these organizations are able to sell or build homes on a down payment as low as 10 per cent with the remainder payable at the rate of 1 per cent of selling or contract price per month, including interest.

Financing is usually through a combination of a first mortgage or deed of trust and a second deed of trust. Some companies sell the first and keep the second. Others sell the second after it becomes "seasoned"—that is, partially paid off—since it can then be disposed of at a lower discount.

When the home buyer deals on such a small down payment, he must understand that considerable financing charges must necessarily be included in the selling or contract price, and furthermore, that the price must also include ample overhead charges. It is the author's experience that such an organization, in order to make a reasonable profit over a period of years, must add from 30 to 40 per cent to the cost of the property or building in establishing the selling or contract price.

Some of these organizations deed the property to the buyer at the time of sale, but in some cases it is sold on a land contract, in which event the deed is not delivered to the buyer until the contract is paid in full, or at least paid down to a reasonable amount. In either case, the contract is subordinate to any liens and incumbrances against the property at the time of purchase.

Until the property is so transferred, the legal title to it remains in the seller, but the buyer acquires an estate in the property, commonly known as an "equity" or an "equitable estate," in proportion to the payments he makes on the purchase price and is not in default in the performance of the contract. He thus becomes an equitable owner.

The buyer should, of course, make a careful check of the title to the property and thoroughly understand the terms of the existing incumbrances, and of his contract.

CHANGE IN MANTELS EFFECTED

Apartments of Normandy and Georgian Type Held Responsible

A new display, illustrating the distinct change in mantel and furniture style that has taken place in California during the last few years, has recently been completed in the Architects' Building Material Exhibit at Fifth and Figueroa streets. It is the exhibit of Benno Simank, interior decorator, and the Colonial Shops, designers of wood mantels and fireplace fixtures.

"A few years ago residential architecture in Southern California was almost entirely Spanish or Italian," the announcement states. "Now that many large apartments are being built in the Georgian or Normandy type there is a trend towards things French, Early American and eighteenth-century English. With these styles fabrics become more refined in texture, softer in color and lighter in design. Furniture tends to become lighter in structure, which is more fitting for the relatively smaller rooms. It is claimed that the mantels of these periods attained the greatest charm both in beauty of design and proportion.

"The accompanying photograph shows a simple Georgian fireplace combining the plain wood mantel with the brick facing. The wallpaper is a semi-scenic type with a cream background and a soft yellow-green design. The carpet is dull gold and the drapes are silk repp repeating the yellow-green edged with a gold and green wool fringe. The swan chair is covered in a faded coral silk of small design, and the ivory lamp has a self-toned shade lined and trimmed in the same shade of coral. An eighteenth-century French painting hangs over the Georgian mantel. The fireplace fixtures add the final touch to a setting that has the warmth and charm of the period that it typifies."

The plain wood mantel with brick facing pictured above is of the Georgian type, declared to be growing in popularity.

FACTORY GAINS MAINTAIN PACE

Development Steady During Past Six Months

Investment Greater Than in Same 1929 Period

Activities Cover Diversified Lines of Industry

Sixty-one new manufacturing industries and expansions by seventy-nine established factories in the Los Angeles district, were initiated or announced during the first six months of 1930, according to R. D. Sangster, industrial manager of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce. It is estimated that these represent capital investment exceeding $7,500,000, and an addition of more than 2300 industrial workers, according to figures compiled at the close of June, Sangster said.

"During the first six months of last year, there were announced forty-three new factories and expansions by seventy-two established manufacturers in this district, involving $16,500,000 investment and 3000 wage earners.

"Capital invested by new factories for land, improvements, buildings machinery and equipment during the past six months approached $5,000,000, as compared with only $3,000,000 for the same period in 1929, an increase of more than 60 per cent, while the outlay for expansions by established concerns during the first half of this year reached nearly $12,500,000, as compared with $13,500,000 for the same purposes in the comparative period a year ago.

"There were sixty-one new factories and seventy-nine expanding industries this year, a total of 140, as compared with fifty-three new concerns and seventy-two expansions, a total of 125, last year.

"The new Procter & Gamble factory at Long Beach, construction of which was begun in June, is not included for in the above report, for the reason that this was announced during the last half of 1929.

"The activities cover diversified lines of industry, including principally sound - reproduction film facilities, diatomaceous earth, motor buses, petroleum refining, paper mills, food products, machine shop products, clay products, vegetable oils, aircraft, lighting fixtures, allied lines of soda and radios."

BOULEVARD LEASE CLOSED

Company Acquires Frontage to Provide Arcade Entrance to Proposed Limit-Height Hotel

Hollywood Business Properties, Ltd., yesterday acquired from Mrs. Leafa M. Fife a ninety-nine-year lease on sixty feet of Hollywood Boulevard frontage, known as the Fife property, immediately adjacent to the Bank of Hollywood Building on the east and to the Pantages Theater building on the west, the deal involving total rentals of $2,084,000, President N. F. Wilson announced. This is the third purchase of major Hollywood boulevard frontage made by Hollywood Business Properties, Ltd., during the last ten days, the transactions involving a total of $7,898,000.

The Fife property with a Hollywood Boulevard frontage of sixty feet, runs back 130 feet to Vine street frontage owned by Hollywood Business Properties on which it is planned to build a limit-height hotel of 600-room capacity and costing $1,000,000, President Wilson said.

"The Fife lot was purchased to give us a Hollywood Boulevard entrance to the hotel site. It will be converted into an arcade, flanked by stores," Wilson announced.

The terms of the lease by which the Fife property was purchased call for rentals of $14,500 for the first five years; $18,000 for the second five years and $21,000 for the remaining eighty-nine years, a total of $2,084,000. The Bank of Hollywood corner, which, immediately adjoins the Fife property, has registered an increase in assessed valuation of 36,327.7 per cent during the last eleven years. Its assessed valuation in 1918 was $360.

Other purchases made by Hollywood Business Properties include the limit-height Taft Building, involving a payment of $950,000 for the building with a ground rental of $4,074,000, and a thirty-seven-year lease on the northeast corner of Hollywood Boulevard and Hudson. The latter property has Hollywood Boulevard frontage of 80 feet by 200 on Hudson, running back to the site of a limit-height hotel on which construction will start August 1, Wilson declared. Purchase price included a bonus of $50,000 and rentals totaling $740,000, according to Thomas D. Barnett who conducted negotiations. Three stores and a public garage are on the property. With the acquisition of these properties Hollywood Business Properties, Ltd., controls by lease, purchase or is interested in practically a mile of key business frontage in Hollywood.

CONVENTION TO COME TO COAST

Next Year's Sessions Won By Western Delegates

Building Owners, Managers to Meet in Seattle

Easterners See Favorable Conditions in West

Successful in their mission to bring the 1931 convention of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers to the Pacific Coast, delegates from the Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle and Spokane units of the organization have returned to their homes from the 1930 meeting in Biloxi, Miss.

Next year's convention will be held in Seattle, it was announced here by Lemuel Freer, manager of buildings for the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company and the Pacific Finance Corporation, who headed the local delegation east as Los Angeles' representative on the national board of governors in the enforced absence of J. B. Van Nuys. Resolutions adopted at the convention, Freer said, will probably have the effect of the national association's meeting being held in future at least once every five years on the Pacific Coast.

Encouraging news of the views of eastern delegates to the convention of conditions in the West was brought back by members of the local delegation. The consensus of opinion appeared to be that, while business conditions throughout the country were still suffering from a period of depression, the West, and particularly California, had much less to complain about than any other section of the United States.

In addition to Freer, who was accompanied by his wife, Los Angeles delegates included Earl A. Langley, manager of leasing and maintenance for the Sun Realty Company; Louis T. Clark, manager of the Subway Terminal Building; Carl Galli, operating manager of the Security-First National properties; Michael Lombardi, secretary-manager of the Law Building Corporation; L. H. Polderman, Pacific Coast representative of the Carrier Engineering Corporation of New York; E. V. Williams, representative of the Weber Showcase Company; Jack Dunn, of the Western Venetian Blind Company, and Ross Grant, secretary of the Los Angeles Building Owners' and Managers' Association.

ELECTRICAL AID OFFERED FOR KITCHEN

City Power Bureau W... Assist in Planning ... Needed Outlets

The kitchen is regarded by many homemakers as the most important part of a home, but it often receives the least consideration as the part of a young couple planning to build, is the statement of many Los Angeles builders.

Acting in an advisory capacity, engineers of the city-owned Bureau of Power and Light seek to relieve this situation by offering to assist builders of homes in Los Angeles in the working out of the electrical arrangement of residences.

"Primary consideration is being given to the placing of outlets to care for the installation of the electric range, the electric refrigerator and the small electric appliances so vastly needed in the home," power bureau engineers declare.

The Bureau of Power and Light is providing on request, a thirty-six-page "Idea Scrap Book," in which the prospective home builder may file the interesting illustrations she has clipped.

Sandwich Shop Chain to Open on Boulevard...

The coffee-pot buildings now under construction in various sections of the city are to house a new type of sandwich shops to be known as the Sanders System, it was announced last week. These shops will have numerous innovations in service, the outstanding feature being explained in their slogan, "Drive-In Your-Car-and-be-Served." Each of these stations will have an operating force of fifteen people.

These "drive-in" sandwich shops are being placed in strategic locations on heavy traffic boulevards, according to E. George Sanders, president of the organization. The expansion program calls for construction of forty-six stations within the next eighteen months, the first unit to be open to the public on July 4.

The construction of the coffee-pot sandwich shops, and other features of equipment, embody patents held by Sanders.

...ONEERS OPEN ...EST BUSINESSES

...geles is one of the oldest in Los Angeles.

Another well-known German family settling here in the early days was the Hellmans. Herman and Isaias Hellman, natives of Reckendorff, Bavaria, arrived here in 1859. Herman became a shipping clerk for Phineas P. Banning at the age of 15 years. He rose to his position in order to enter the stationary business with his brother, who became the owner of the Hellman Block, which still stands opposite the City Hall on Main street.

BAKER FOR ARMY

Louis Mesmer was an early Teutonic pioneer. Born at Sulz, Alsace, he learned the trade of a baker in Strassbourg and migrated to Los Angeles about 1858. He established a bakery at Las Palmas ranch, now in the heart of the industrial section. Mesmer supplied the Civil War recognition during the Civil War when he became official baker for the Union Army in California.

Another German Angeleno who distinguished himself in the Civil War was Herman Jacoby, who won honors fighting under General Sherman in the Shenandoah Valley. He came to Los Angeles in 1864 and married into the Feliz family, which included some of the most prominent architects of the old city. The Jacoby family ended one of the largest department stores in Los Angeles.

Other famous German settlers here, according to Barker's study, were August Brossmer, owner of a large farm on lower Broadway; a ten-acre "Roundhouse George" Lehman, proprietor of the old Biergarten on Third and Main, and Ed Maier of the Maier Brewing Company.

...ough it is only twenty-six ... is ample room for thousands of spectators, all of whom can hear every word spoken by a speaker in an ordinary conversational tone of voice.

Work on the highway has been in progress for the past three years, and its construction embodied some unusual and remarkable engineering feats. Its purpose is to shorten the distance between three national parks, Zion, where the highway begins, and Grand Canyon and Bryce Canyon national parks to the south and northeast, respectively.

OVER SWITCHBACKS

Beginning near the park ranger station at the entrance to Zion National Park, the road ascends in a long series of gently rising switchbacks until it reaches the sheer face of one of the crimson cliffs of Zion National Park. Here the longer of the two tunnels begins, and penetrates this cliff for a distance of more than a mile. The road finally emerges at the top of the plateau

Biscailuz to do all in their power ... either thing happening ... place during the daytime or even after night unless there is eminent danger of the vehicle being stripped of valuable accessories. If a disabled vehicle is obstructing traffic the officer is supposed to get voluntary assistance to remove it from the highway temporarily.

"The California Highway Patrol will not tolerate any of its officers favoring any particular garage," said Biscailuz. "If cars bear the insignia of any automobile club or service clubs and the owners cannot be found our men are instructed to get the assistance of such club for the removal of damaged cars."

And, mind you, California is the only State that has them—these joyous municipal mountain camps, where we can revel in the glories of nature and the simple life, at a figure well within the most modest income.

For instance, I have just returned from Camp Seeley, above the Rim o' the World, on sixteen gallons of gasoline, all told, eighty miles from Los Angeles. We left Los Angeles at 8 a.m. Wednesday, arrived in camp well before noon, in time for a topping dinner out under the oak and pine trees. And it's a beautiful drive all the way, past the flaming rose-hedged orange groves, through the luscious vineyards, up through Waterman Canyon, with the hills still green, the land carpeted with wild flowers, and a rippling mountain brooklet racing past us for the last half of the way.

PATERNAL WELCOME

We were received by a nice old dear, Mr. Grider, who has adopted this camp since it was first opened for the benefit of Los Angeles citizens thirteen years ago. He gave us a gruff welcome and admonished us for parking at the wrong slant—then relented and gave us paternal welcome. Mr. Grider is a sort of camp housekeeper, but they naughtily call him "the cop." He conducted us to Lucille Morrison, who, with her husband, is in charge of the camp all summer. Mr. Morrison teaches science at Beverly High School, and resumes command directly school is out. These two have been god-parenting thousands of campers for five years now. Mrs. Morrison is a trim, capable, sweet little person who has a hard time being bossy.

Now, this camp is about the jolliest, least expensive form of holiday one could wish for. The setting is entrancing. The cabins are plain but clean and picturesque. There is a sumptuous swimming-pool, presided over by a god-like young lifesaver, Howard Clark. There are tennis courts, croquet, baseball and a big social hall for dancing and entertainment, with an immense

CONTEST STIRS INTEREST

Prizes Aggregating $500 Prove Incentive to Camera-Loving Motorists of Southland

With the announcement of The Times photographic motorlog contest, Southern California motorists have become "camera conscious," according to the hundreds of motorists who have signified their intention of presenting what they consider the "ideal automobile trip with the perfect spot photograph." During the ten-week feature which will appear in these columns $500 in cash prizes will be awarded and three cash awards totalling $35 will be presented by The Times every week for the persons submitting the three best negatives and prints of what they consider is a one-day outing in which the millions of other residents of the Southland will be interested.

Tucked away in the minds of motorists is a spot which outrivals to them all others within one-day driving distance of Los Angeles. You may have taken the photograph already or if not, you know the exact spot on which to focus your camera, so that your scenic attraction will be illustrated for publication in the Los Angeles Times.

Officials in charge of the contest emphasize that this feature is open to all amateur photographers and their prints will not be judged along

FIRE PERMITS, AXES REQUIRED IN FORESTS

A fire permit is required of all campers on national forest land, and a shovel and ax per car or pack train are also necessary. These regulations will be rigidly enforced, according to the report reaching the outing bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California from the United States Forest Service.

'FRESH AIR' AUTO TYPE NOW PASSE

Riding Habits of Nation Changed During Last Decade

How the riding habits of the nation have changed in ten years is shown by the reversal of popularity as between open and closed cars. The "fresh-air" type of automobile has steadily lost ground. In 1919, according to statistics in "Facts and Figures of the Automobile Industry," a publication recently issued by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, only 10 per cent of the passenger cars produced were closed types, while in 1929 all but 10 per cent were closed.

In a sense this is a triumph of utility over beauty for, while all cars have steadily grown better looking, it is generally conceded to be impossible to put as much grace of line into closed-car bodies as into the open types. That still holds true, for the latest open jobs are the smartest that have ever been seen on the highways.

THE REO SILENT-SECOND TRANSMISSION

...Gives you Unequalled Driving Control

The big thing in motoring nowadays is driving control—the ability to make your car do what you want—and do it instantly. You get unequalled driving control in the Reo Flying Cloud—thanks to the combination of marvelous brakes and the Reo Silent-Second Transmission. This transmission is silent—it's swift—it's sure. With it, you can flash past slow-moving trucks on upgrades, where ordinarily you'd have to crawl in line. On dangerous downgrades you can shift back to second at 40—swiftly. And you get this transmission in the Reo Flying Cloud—one of the finest built and smartest looking cars on the road. Now—before you decide on a new car—discover all that the Reo Flying Cloud offers you.

Detroit Auto Engineers Told Radical Changes Required to Satisfy Public Demand

KEEN CRITICISM FREELY GIVEN

Expert Elaborates Views on Car Design

Two Pounds Per Horsepower Enough Weight

Brass Bands, Chorus Girls No Longer Required

BY E. Y. WATSON

(Written exclusively for The Times and the North American Newspaper Alliance.)

DETROIT, June 28. — Engineers of Detroit automobile manufacturing plants were given an airplane view of themselves and their work last week. The occasion was an assembly of the Detroit section, Society of Automotive Engineers. The speaker was William B. Stout, head of the Stout Metal Airplane division of the Ford Motor Company, and of an aircraft transport line bearing his name.

The auto engineers listened intently to what Stout had to say because he is experienced in both ends of the game. Years ago he graduated into aircraft design from the body engineering division of the Packard company.

From this background of experience, he criticised the motor cars of today.

"I wonder," he said, "if we have not forgotten that we should be designing automobiles for the public and not for the sales departments. I wonder if the sales departments have not lost their vision as to who should design these cars. The public attitude has changed in the last three years.

CHANGE COMING

"Somebody has said that people are buying only two things in cars —'swank' and transportation. The reason is that the engineers have left them nothing else to buy. But we are going to have radical cars and the industry is about ready for them.

"The proof of that is that there are only two radical cars on the market today, and they are coming off the production lines in large volume."

Mr. Stout did not name the cars he referred to. He went on to say there was no reason why engineers could not build cars that would be much lighter than those we have now. He mentioned two pounds of weight per housepower as the proportion he had in mind.

BETTER ACCELERATION

"I venture to say that cars weighing not over 1800 pounds can be built that will accelerate beyond anything we have now. A sixteen-cylinder car weighs approximately the same as a three-engined airplane, and the airplane can accelerate from one to eighty miles an hour in ten seconds. Try that on your car."

Air cooling for motor cars still has large possibilities in Mr. Stout's belief and he mentioned the name of a current make which has an aluminum alloy engine block as being progressive.

He urged that time and study be devoted toward change in the generally accepted models to evolve a new viewpoint. Pointing out that the railroads when they started had only wagons to go by, he said that the first rail cars were only wagons with flanged wheels. In the same way, the motor car still kept many of the characteristics of the buggy, and in turn the airplane industry was a development from automobile manufacturing.

ON ONE POINT

"Has anyone," Mr. Stout queried, "ever thought of designing a motor car as a complete structure without dividing it into chassis and body, in which only two-thirds of the space is used for passenger space?"

Along such lines he believed the cut and dried process of development could be reversed and the motor car might now copy from the airplane. If the turning point is coming, as many believe, the sales side of many companies would be much worried, because radical cars would not only be hard to design but hard to sell. Beauty is not a matter of opinion but one of technique. Cars sell because they look the part, and the fundamental is what the public wants at the price.

Incidentally, in the course of his talk, Mr. Stout quoted an aphorism of Henry Ford: "An expert is a man who can tell you the most ways by which a thing cannot be done."

As a parting shot he said that the day was near when motor cars would no longer be sold with the aid of brass bands and chorus girls.

New Line of Cars Being Introduced Today

Four Body Models

Mounted on the 6-14 chassis introduced by Durant earlier this year, a new group of four models is being introduced by that maker. The above is the sport roadster.

CHECKERS BY JOHN DOUGHERTY

June 29, 1930.

Chess and Checker Headquarters, 900 Union League Building, corner of Second and Hill streets. All chess and checker players invited to join.

All communications intended for this department should be addressed to John Dougherty, 4626 Dalton avenue, Los Angeles.

AMONG THE FANS

The following article is by one of the participants of the tourney now being played at the Municipal Men's Club at 230 South Main street:

The annual checker tourney of the Men's Municipal Club has passed the preliminary stage. Of the thirty-one entries only nine were able to score the 80 per cent necessary to continue play. Messrs. Johnson, Marinoff, Hall, Morley, Lundy, Morrah, Dacus, Reyburn and Kidwell were the successful ones.

The second round is progressing rapidly. Morley, Lundy, Hall and Morrah are already safely under the wire. The status of Reyburn and Kidwell is still in doubt.

The style of elimination enjoyed this year is more popular for a club tourney than old single or double knock-out system and probably fairer to all. There are some disagreeable features, however, that should be ruled against, if possible.

Played thus a tourney resolves itself partly into an endurance contest, a good physique and strong eyes being too great an asset. Favoritism also shows its ugly face occasionally, losing players intentionally throwing games to fatten the average of their friends.

If some ingenious person would come forward with a sound idea to minimize these difficulties, his service would be worthy of applause from all checker players.

AUTO DEATHS MAY GROW THIS YEAR

Last year 31,500 persons were killed in traffic accidents in the United States and if ratios of increase established in the past continue, the deaths will reach 33,000 in 1930, according to reports to the Automobile Club of Southern California.

DURANT SHOWS NEW MODEL

Six-Fourteen Line Augmented by Additional Body Types Presented on Pacific Coast Today

Durant dealers throughout the Pacific Coast territory today, for the first time, are revealing to the general public a new addition to the 6-14 line of motor cars, originally introduced in February. It is the standard model, consisting of four body types on the 6-14 chassis.

The latest Durant offering is presented at a delivered price, including full equipment of bumpers and spare tire, that is less than $900. The body types are five-passenger sedan, sport roadster, coupe with rumble seat and business coupe. The chassis has a wheelbase of 112 inches.

WIDE RANGE COVERED

With the addition of the standard 6-14, the Durant line now comprises a series of motor cars covering a price range in which are 80 per cent of all the automobiles sold in the United States last year. In the lowest priced field is the recently introduced four-cylinder model. The six-cylinder line consists of the entirely new 6-14 in both standard and de luxe models and the sixty-six, the lowest priced car in the world with four forward speeds.

The bodies of the new cars, as a result of the accentuated horizontal and subdued vertical lines, together with sweeping curves, suggest fleetness and speed. Wide doors insure easy access to the roomy interiors and when seated the passenger finds ample head and leg room. Seat cushions and backs are so molded and placed as to give a feeling of restfulness and to insure comfort. Proper location of the seats and the slenderness of the steel pillars provide exceptional visibility.

Seats of the coupes and roadster, as well as the front seat of the sedan, are adjustable. The short control lever, near the floor, is just behind the gearshift. A ratchet and screw construction makes the mechanism easy to operate.

AIM OF ENGINEERS

The aim of Durant engineer in developing the six-fourteen series has been to combine the strength of the all-steel body with the inherent advantages of wood framing. The cowl assembly, corner pillars, forward roof rail, sedan center pillars, wheel housing, rear kick-up sill, and the doors, are all steel.

The powerful six-cylinder Red Seal Continental motor, having a bore and stroke of 3 1-4x4 inches, respectively, built to the design specifications of Durant engineers, is mounted in unit construction with a multiple spring, rubber-cushioned single plate clutch and Durant-designed three-speed transmission. The power plant is tilted back at a sufficient angle to afford a straight-line drive under normal loading. The tubular propeller shaft employs two all-metal type Spicer universal joints.

Three factors contribute to the steering ease of the new Durant creation. It is virtually "center point," that is, the extended axis of the steering knuckle pivot pin meets the plane of the roadway approximately in line with the center line of the tire; ball thrust bearings are employed between the steering knuckles and the heavy I-beam; and the 14½-to-1 steering gear employs tapered roller thrust bearings above and below the worm. The car is also provided with an easy grip, 17-inch speedway type steering wheel.

MANY NEW FEATURES

Lubrication of the six-cylinder engine is by a gear-driven pump which delivers oil under pressure to the oil main and from which other passages lead to the crankshaft main bearings and timing chain. Spray thrown from rapidly revolving cranks on the drilled crankshaft lubricates cylinder walls, pistons, valve mechanism and other working parts inside the engine. The oil pressure relief valve, consisting of a plunger or piston which, when forced back against the control spring, uncovers relief ports, is silent in operation. An easily replaceable oil filter is fitted to keep the lubricant free from foreign substances, and a crank-case ventilator, connected with the carburetor air intake, draws any vaporized fuel or water vapor from the case.

Moriarity to Promote Sales of Tiny Car

The American Austin Car Company, which is today introducing the new bantam car to Los Angeles motordom, has drafted on Los Angeles talent for one of its executive officers in the person of George H. Moriarty, formerly general manager of Locomobile of California.

GEORGE H. MORIARTY

In this capacity with Locomobile, Moriarty made such a sales record with this now discontinued high-priced car that he was drafted by the factory for a series of hard tasks in the sale of the more important factory branches owned by Locomobile and finally culminating in his sale of the factory itself to a taxicab manufacturing company.

About two months ago Moriarty was a visitor in Los Angeles but has now returned to Detroit, where he has assumed the position of sales promotion manager for the Austin company.

Bantam Cars Now on Display

Hands Across the Hood

ETHYL GASOLINE GREAT SELLER DURING YEAR

Motorists used more than 1,650,000,000 gallons of Ethyl gasoline during the last twelve months, refiners' reports show. Rigid control over the quality of this fuel is maintained by the Ethyl Gasoline Corporation's laboratory system. This is made possible only by a continuous series of checks beginning with the base gasoline to be treated and ending with the product sold at the filling stations.

Oil companies holding license agreements to mix Ethyl fluid with their gasoline are required, as the first step, to segregate in a tank the base stock to be used. A sample of this stock is then sent to the nearest Ethyl gasoline laboratory.

Complete tests are run on this sample, first to insure that it meets the corporation's specifications so far as stability, sulphur, gum, volatility, etc., are concerned, and second, to determine the amount of tetraethyl lead, the chief constituent of Ethyl fluid, which must be added to bring the gasoline to the antiknock standard required by the corporation.

The first step is necessary, it is explained, because in meeting the demand for an antiknock fuel, oil refiners are faced with a definite problem. It is known that certain crudes and certain refinery processes will produce gasoline of good antiknock qualities, while gasolines from other crudes have just the opposite characteristics. On the other hand, it is often difficult to produce gasoline of good antiknock quality which at the same time is free from objectionable characteristics. The laboratories co-operate with the refiners in the solution of such problems.

If the sample sent in by refinery passes the analysis for quality, it is then subjected to antiknock tests. Engines used in Ethyl laboratories to determine how much tetraethyl lead must be added to assure definite antiknock value are special one-cylinder affairs of very high compression. They are equipped with double carburetors to enable the operator to shift from one fuel to another, and with instruments for recording the intensity of the knock.

Conditions of the test-speed and temperature must be held very constant. The operator adjusts the engine to a moderate knock on a standard reference fuel and records the intensity of this knock. He then shifts rapidly to the fuel under investigation and again records the intensity of the knock. He next adds tetraethyl lead to the unknown fuel until he finds the knock exactly equal to that of the reference fuel. The double carburetor enables him to shift back and forth from reference standard to unknown until there is no doubt about the result.

If the base gasoline itself is within requirements, the oil company is notified at once by wire as to the amount of tetraethyl lead which must be added. When this tetraethyl lead has been added, another sample of the blended gasoline must be sent to the laboratory and passed upon before shipment can be made from the refinery.

A large field staff travels about the country taking samples from pumps marketing Ethyl gasoline. These samples, in turn, are tested at the laboratory. Should any be found to be below standard, an immediate investigation is conducted as to the cause.

CONTEST STIRS INTEREST

side the work of professionals. First entries in the contest arrived Wednesday and the number arriving have increased daily.

It seems necessary to warn prospective entrants that it is necessary to send directions for reaching the spot photographed as required by the rules. A number of entries already received will be disqualified because they do not comply with the rules reproduced herewith.

Several have not understood if the one-day distance from Los Angeles stipulated as the limit for the trip requires that the round trip be completed in that time. This is not the case as the location can be at such a distance from the city that it requires a full day to reach it, hence permitting at least two days for the round trip if desirable.

RULES FOR MOTORLOG CONTEST

1. The Times weekly motorlog contests are open to everyone except employees of the Los Angeles Times and their families, professional photographers, persons connected with advertising agencies, publicity bureaus or newspapers. It is not necessary to be a member of The Times staff. The rules have published govern each of the series of contests.

2. Any amateur photographer is eligible to participate and may submit as many photographs as desired, provided each picture submitted complies with the rules hereto stated.

3. Subjects must be within one day's drive of Los Angeles by automobile. (Merely necessary to be within reach in one day, thus permitting a two-day round trip.)

4. Photograph must have been taken during 1930.

5. Contestants must submit:
(a) Negative and one print of each picture submitted.
(b) Name and address of person taking picture and others in party.
(c) Date upon which photograph was taken.
(d) Not more than a fifty-word description of scene photographed.
(e) Not more than a fifty-word explanation of how to reach scene by motor car.

6. To the person submitting the best photograph and description as outlined in section 5 a prize of $20 will be given in each weekly contest. The second weekly prize will be $10; third prize $5. In the event of a tie duplicate prizes will be given to each tying contestant. Each contest is complete in itself and no photograph submitted during one contest is eligible to compete in a later one.

7. At the close of the series of ten weekly contests cumulative prizes of $100 first prize and $50 second prize will be awarded to the persons whose photographs and descriptions are judged the best of the entire list submitted during the ten weeks. The first contest closes at midnight tomorrow, June 30. The second weekly contest closes at midnight, Monday, July 7; the third at midnight, July 14, and so on. Entries intended for any particular contest must be postmarked before the expiration period of that contest. If postmarked after that expiration they will be automatically entered in the contest next succeeding. The tenth and last contest will close at midnight, September 8, and no entry will be received after that time.

8. No one contestant or member of his family or motor party shall be eligible to win more than one first prize, one second prize and one third prize in the ten weekly contests and not more than one of the two cumulative prizes.

9. An entry with insufficient postage will not be accepted. The Times cannot be responsible for delay, loss, or non-delivery of entries.

10. All entries must be sent by mail.

11. All prize-winning negatives and prints submitted in this contest become the property of The Times and may be used without compensation by The Times other than that awarded as prize money. No other negatives or prints will be returned unless a stamped, self-addressed envelope is provided therefor.

12. The judges will be a committee appointed by The Times, and their decision will be final. Announcement of winners will be made in The Times as soon after the close of each weekly contest and the close of the entire contest as possible.

13. Acceptance of these rules is an express condition of entry. The Times cannot engage in correspondence on the matter.

14. Two or more people may co-operate in submitting any motorlog, but only one prize will be given to any one household or to any one group.

15. Negatives and prints may be of any size desired. Descriptions may be submitted in any form desired, though preferably on white paper, size 8½x11 inches. Write on one side of paper only. Neatness will be a factor.

16. Entries will be judged thus:
(a) Fifty per cent for the subject photographed, its uniqueness, scenic or historic interest.
(b) Twenty-five per cent for clarity and accuracy of description of the scene and directions for motoring to it.
(c) Twenty-five per cent for photographic quality.

17. Subjects photographed must be of such a character that, by following the directions given therewith, other motorists may find and see them substantially as pictured and described.

18. Direct all entries to Motorlog Contest Editor, Times Building, 181 North Broadway.

MANY VISITORS GO TO CRATER LAKE PARK

During the first ten days of June 5500 visitors reached Crater Lake over the excellent highways from Medford and Klamath Falls. This makes a total of 28,506 visitors to Crater Lake National Park during the 1930 travel year, as against 7679 visitors this date in 1929, or 270 per cent increase in travel over last year.

PILOTS REPORT FIRES

Pilots of the T.A.T.-Maddux Air Line Company have been instructed by Feltz F. Fregg, flight superintendent, to report by radio to the base field office via the closest company or Department of Commerce station all fires discovered while flying their regular routes. Field offices will then transmit the message to the nearest United States Forest Service headquarters.

BANTAM CAR TO BE SHOWN

Large Crowds Expected to View Austin, America's Smallest Auto, to Be Exhibited Today

America's newest and smallest motor car—the Austin—with an English ancestry in which, it may be suspected, there is a strong strain of thrifty Scottish blood, may be seen here by the general public for the first time today.

Doors of the sales and service establishment at 1702 South Figueroa street, which is to be the permanent Southland Austin headquarters, will be thrown open this morning at 9 o'clock. Between that time and near midnight tonight, with a colorful formal opening, it is expected that possibly 10,000, or more, persons will jam the showrooms.

Arrangements have been made by Calvin C. Eib, general manager for the Austin-Los Angeles Company, Ltd., to care for this huge crowd without trouble and to make it possible for every visitor to view the unique and economical little cars.

It is announced that five coupes will be on display, as well as a chassis. The roadsters have not yet arrived, but photographs will be available for the benefit of advance purchasers.

Tonight the place will be brightly illuminated with colored flood lights and searchlights a la Hollywood "first nights." And because of the position which the Gore Brothers, financial backers of the distribution company, occupy in the theatrical world, it is expected that many movie stars will be among the visitors at the premiere.

The new bantam Austin car rests on a wheelbase of 6 feet 2 inches. Its tread is 3 feet 4 inches. Its total width is only 4 feet, 6 inches. These dimensions give the car exceptional maneuverability in heavy traffic and allow it to dart into places where other cars fear to tread. Its ground clearance of 6 3-8 inches is ample for all American roads. Nor is the bantam at all touchy about its weight, a tender spot with many of its sister machines. On the contrary, it boasts of the fact that its total weight is only 1130 pounds.

Its other mechanical features are revealed as follows:

Engine. Four-cylinder, water-cooled detachable L Head. Bore, 2.2 inches, stroke, 3 inches, ignition; battery and oil. Cooling, thermo-syphon. Capacity 1½ gallons. Main crankshaft bearings, one double row ball-bearing, one roller bearing. Lubrication, Austin pump and jet type. Capacity five pints.

Starter. Autolite, Benedix drive.

Clutch. Single-plate.

Gearbox. Three speeds forward, and reverse; ratios 3-25 to 1-9.7 to 1, and 17 to 1; reverse, 22 to 1; ball and roller bearings throughout.

Rear axle. Semifloating. Ball and Timken taper roller bearings throughout. Final drive by helical bevel pinion and gear.

Springs. One-half elliptic cross spring in front, two quarter elliptics at rear, semicantilever. Special Austin shock absorbers fitted to front and rear.

Steering. Worm and wheel, adjustable for wear.

Front axle. Forged, "H" section.

Brakes. Four-wheel internal expanding; equalized and easily adjustable.

Wheels. Disc with demountable rims.

Lighting. Generator and storage battery.

Turning radius. Sixteen M Circle 33'.

PUNCTURES GONE WITH NEW TUBES

Air Containers

Claiming to have developed a product that finally eliminates flat tires caused by punctures the Goodrich Rubber Company is offering a new type of inner tube for automobile tires called Air Containers.

While the containers do not prevent punctures they are claimed capable of preventing the escape of air following any but extraordinarily large punctures.

The container to outward appearances is very similar to the conventional inner tube but does differ in that it is much heavier and in that it is differently constructed.

The drawings herewith show the tube inflated in the casing, and below, before inflation. The side of the container nearest the tread is several times thicker than the ordinary tube and is reinforced by a cord insertion.

Air is prevented from escaping by the squeezing of the rubber into any hole. Before inflation the tread side of the tube is concave and there is a surplus of rubber on the inside of the tube which is the long side of the curve. As compressed the long side becomes the shorter side of the curve and so in shortening the space the rubber can occupy the tendency is to compress the rubber. Any hole in the tube permits the rubber to give way into the space following the compressing tendency constantly present in the tube at this point.

Because of the heavier construction it is claimed that these containers have approximately three times the life of any ordinary tube and that they permit greater mileage from casings.

The price is higher due to the large amount of rubber used and the more complicated construction.

Some Colors Not Allowed

Beware of green or red color schemes for your automobile if you intend to tour in Persia, Arabia or Japan. In those countries, which take their colors quite seriously, certain shades are not permitted for the layman. Persia and Arabia consider green a sacred hue, while in Japan, dark red or maroon is reserved for the Imperial family.

Waltons Hold Big Tujunga Shoot Today

The trapshooting tournament scheduled for today by the Los Angeles chapter of the Izaak Walton League, which will be held at Izaak Walton Park, located in the Big Tujunga Wash at Sunland, will include a 100-bird event for chapter teams, a 100-bird handicap event and a fifty-bird doubles event on the standard traps, while a fifty-bird event will be held on the skeet field.

Merchandise prizes are being offered the winners in the various events on the day's program. In addition to these, the Los Angeles chapter's perpetual cup, offered to the trapshooter in the local chapter making the highest score for the day at this annual shoot, and now held by J. W. Ingle, will be contested for.

Salt and Fresh Water Fishing Both Reach Peak of Season With Heavy Catches Reported

TROUT WATERS YIELD BEAUTIES

Ocean Run Continues With Varieties Varying

Corbina and Spot Fin Taken by Surf Anglers

Kern Reports Show First Class Results

Angling, both fresh and salt water, was productive of many good catches over the last week. For trout fishing, ideal conditions prevailed at many places, while for ocean fishing, the run which started nearly two months ago continued with no let-up in sight.

The splendid ocean angling seems general from the Mexican border to as far north as Santa Barbara. From the barge Point Loma near San Diego, the report declares that deep-sea angling slowed up off the kelp beds for a couple of days, but again picked up better than before, big catches of barracuda, bonita, white yellowtail being caught. The best yellowtail angling is predicted for next month, when the weather is warmer.

From H. G. McNeill at Long Beach the word is that fishing couldn't be better, good catches being made from pier, surf, live-bait boats and the barges.

SANTA MONICA GOOD

The ideal fishing that has existed off the Santa Monica coast line continued another week. Catches being made from the ships have included bass, halibut, barracuda and bonita. The barracuda have been running larger than usual, some weighing as much as fourteen pounds.

Some notable catches have been made during the last two weeks from the Palisades, which is on the all-day run. Large white sea bass and halibut, the latter weighing over forty pounds, have been landed. Yellowtail have been seen on numerous occasions in the bay, but none caught recently.

Surf, pier, barge and live-bait boat angling off Hermosa continued good the last week. Corbina, yellow and spot fin are being caught in the surf; bonita, perch, mackerel, halibut and barracuda from the pier; bass, bonita, barracuda, halibut and yellowtail from the boats and on the two barges bonita, sculpin, bass, sand dabs, mackerel, halibut and barracuda.

From Ocean Park the angling report states bass, barracuda and halibut were the principal fish caught, the fish running large and hungry.

TWIN LAKES

A report reaching Earl Wilcox at the Western Auto Supply Company from Twin Lakes in the high Sierras declares trout fishing in that vicinity has been very good, especially in Buckeye and Robinson creeks. In the upper lake, more fish are being caught than in the lower, although the fish are larger in the lower. Angle worms and spinners are proving best bait.

The first report of the season from Ol' Sam Lewis, veteran guide and packer out of Little Lake, came in a few days ago. It stated fine weather exists, with fine fishing and beautiful scenery. Best fishing was at Fish, Trout, with Rattlesnake and South Fork of Kern.

Excellent trout fishing is reported from the Kern in the vicinity of Jordan Hot Springs, some returning anglers declaring it better than at any time during the last four years. The trout are of an excellent size and taking flies better than bait.

STREAM FISHING

Good stream fishing has been had in the streams around Mineral King, especially at Little Kern and the East Fork of the Kaweah. Particularly good lake fishing has been had on some days, limit catches being taken.

Bass fishing has been good at Bass Lake in Madera county but very medium at Sweetwater Lake in San Diego county. At the latter location for the week ending last Sunday only 408 fish were caught, the largest weighing four pounds. The inactivity is expected to be over any day.

IDEAL WEATHER

Ideal weather conditions now exist throughout the Sierra Nevada Mountains. Fishing is improving with the lowering of streams, reports the outing bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

AUTOMOTIVE ODDITIES - By Pete Keenan

METER GIVES MANY FACTS TO DRIVERS

Speedometer Supplies Motorists With Valuable Information

Often speedometers are blamed for noises that originate elsewhere, but rarely can noise be traced to the speedometer itself. So-called speedometer noises occur when the flexible shaft, or cable, is kicked or pushed into a position where it has too sharp a bend. Any motorist can correct this simply by reaching behind the instrument board and moving the shaft into a more favorable position.

Many motorists will be interested in knowing how the speedometer on their car works. It operates from a drive, which is an integral part of the engine's transmission. One end of a flexible shaft or cable is attached to this drive and the other end to the speedometer. As the shaft revolves the speedometer operates and for every 1008 revolutions the odometer will register one mile. By the same token 1008 revolutions a minute will indicate sixty miles an hour on the speed dial.

Speedometers seldom get out of order and whenever they fail to function it usually is due to the breaking of the cable which connects the speedometer with the driving mechanism. This breakage usually occurs only when the cable has been sharply twisted and bent through carelessness.

That the speedometer is one of the most necessary devices on the automobile can be seen from a partial list of services it performs:

It tells how fast one is driving.

How far traveled.

Gives distance between towns.

Tells when to change oil and when to have other services done in accordance with car instruction manual.

Tells how much tire mileage one is getting.

How much mileage per gallon of gasoline.

fireplace, and tables for cards. There's a jolly orchestra—the girl who plays the drum and all the et cetera music that belongs to it is Eileen Barr, and that precious drum is her child.

There's a ducky little general store and postoffice presided over by John Doye, who has also been there from the beginning, and writes ecstatic poetry besides. There is something in the air up there that inspires them all to poetry—another irrepressible poet is the Nature Guide, "Daddy" Barton, a darling betrousered lady of 72, with gray bobbed hair, who knows all about birds, plants, wild life and tells us to have no fear of the mosquitoes, as the bats eat 'em all up. She was quite right—we slept out of doors and never had a bite.

GENEROUS MEALS

The meals are generous and good. Jo Killough, the jolly cook, sees to that. Breakfast at 8 a.m., fruit, cereal, scrambled eggs, toast, coffee, lots of cream and milk and second helpings allowed.

We all line up when the bell rings and walk, cafeteria style, to serve ourselves. Then, if it's warm, we sit at tables beneath the trees. If cold, there's a big indoor dining-room. Afterward we scrape and stack our own plates and Johnny Blanchard washes 'em all up in a fancy set of stylish tubs. Johnny is important, too, one of the rare paid help. He gets $75 a month for this job and is paying his way through Pomona College. A charming youngster who intends to be a newspaper man. In the meantime he's a dishwasher de luxe and a high favorite with the girls.

The waitresses are all college girls, who do this for their board and the fun. They form a dashing array as they stand behind the big dishes of good food in their khaki pants, with cute little aprons over them. Only kitchen and office help are paid—oh, yes, and the band gets $10 a month.

Dinner is at 12:30, meat, two vegetables, salad and dessert, bread and butter, coffee and milk. Supper is at 5:30, soup, macaroni, salad, one vegetables and dessert. Anyone can go back for more.

There is a nice "program director," Beatrice Poskett, who specializes in that work in the Los Angeles school playgrounds. She carves fancy things out of ivory soap, too, and the children adore her.

TWO KINDS OF CABINS

There are two kinds of cabins, housekeeping and otherwise. They will accommodate five persons, the charge being 50 cents a night per person if one takes one's own bedding. Bedding is 50 cents a night extra. Or the American plan charge is $3 a day per person, or $12.25 a week; or $19.50 for two weeks. Children under 2 years of age, American plan, are 85 cents a day, or $6 for two weeks. Between 2 and 4 it's $1 a day, or $9.75 for two weeks and $1.50 a day up to 11, $13 for two weeks. Separate meals are 50 cents straight.

For those who haven't a car there is a bus connecting with the Pacific Electric at San Bernardino. Full round trip for adults $4.50 and half-price for children.

Housekeeping costs a trifle more than in Los Angeles—groceries, etc., being about 10 per cent higher on account of the haul. Fresh vegetables come up every other day. Laundry is easy (but be wise and take some clothes pegs, as there is always a shortage,) but ironing isn't so good—no electric lights or gas, just jolly old oil lamps. But nobody irons things up there or cares. Khaki pants and waists are the best for both sexes, with perhaps a change for the evening, although few of them bother. Coveralls for the youngsters.

An extremely nice class of people were there, including newspaper people, teachers and numerous professionals. Hiking is important. There are the superhikers, who talk about twenty-mile tramps over the mountains. There are ten and five-mile hikes, and lots of nice short little hikes, as that up Lost Spring Canyon to Heart Rock, for people like me, who only want to pretend to be athletic. And everywhere, everywhere, in sunlight spots between the trees and rocks, there are wild strawberries, wallflowers, irises, cowslips, broom, gauze, bluebells, Yucca, sunflowers galore, to say nothing of the giant ferns and the wild maidenhair. "Daddy" Barton, who always begins the day with a cold shower, knows and collects them all. There are several kinds of pine, cedar and oak trees and shrubbery galore, so that one is kept in ecstatic wonder.

And there is a camp nurse, Mrs. Gertrude Place, who was once German, trekked for many years in Old Mexico, believes in Essie Lincoln Benedict, and is a never-failing source of good stories.

It's a halcyon spot, above the clouds. "Daddy" Barton's pet quotation is:

"I bartered my sleep for a starlit bed,
I traded my meat for a crust of bread.
I changed my book for a sapling cane,
And I'm off to the end of the world again."

Just as John Doge wrote:

"Lost in a valley all its own, Seeley
so calm and mild,
Bidding you come to her shady nooks, there to rest a while,
Forget the grind of city life, which you have left behind,
'Twill give you strength and courage new, 'neath cedar, oak and pine."

I mean even the most unpromising people just have to break out into poetry up at Camp Seeley. And I vow Lake Louise and Banff, which cost the very dickens to enjoy, have nothing on Seeley—Los Angeles' municipal camp.

Stanton Joins Tire Concern as Executive

Frank T. Price, president of Price & Price, Ltd., western distributors of Firestone tires, just announced the addition of Edward F. Stanton to the executive staff of the concern.

Stanton is well known in the financial world, wherein he has engineered some of the largest grocery store deals in the country. He founded the first self-service grocery stores in "the Groceterias" as early as 1914. He recently sold his "Stanton Stores," of which he was owner, to the MacMarr concern. He retains a managing directorship in the latter organization. He was also a director in the Piggly Wiggly corporation. Stanton is reported one of the nation's leading authorities on chain store operation, so it will be in this department of business that he will exercise his efforts for Nelson & Price, Ltd., who now operate fifteen stores in principal locations in California cities.

Pullen Takes Check Prize for Auto Test

As the result of a nation-wide demonstration of Willys six automobiles, during which they made 5,000,000 miles in one week, the cash prizes have been awarded and has been received by J. W. Lewis & Co., Willys Overland distributors, announces Clair R. Savage, zone manager. This check was turned over to Eddie Pullen, former race pilot, who drove the Willys six in the demonstration runs here, it was stated.

During the tests here Eddie Pullen drove a stock Willys six from Los Angeles to San Diego, both in second gear, a distance of 120 miles, averaging 44.56 miles an hour. He drove the same car, again both in second gear, from Los Angeles to San Francisco, 423 miles, averaging 40.17 miles an hour.

On the Bakersfield run that the car traveled 209 miles in 4[illegible] minutes in high gear, averaging over two miles an hour for eleven hours and seventeen minutes.

Among the other [illegible] tests was a speed run from Huntington, W. Va., to Toledo, O., a distance of 285 miles which was made in 319 minutes, beating the fastest train by two hours and four minutes. In a power test at Miami, Fla., a Willys six pulled a loaded freight car 200 feet.

CAREFUL DRIVING

Careful driving is urged on the Coast Highway (United States No. 101,) north of Pismo Beach, now widening, states the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

MOTORCYCLE SETS MARK ON HOT DAY

Dry Lake Speed Run of Twenty-four Hours Makes New Records

In the broiling heat of the Mojave Desert, with the thermometer during the middle of the day registering temperatures from 116 to 125 deg., a stock two-cylinder Super X motorcycle established a new twenty-four-hour continuous run world's record for motorcycles powered with a motor of 45-cubic-inch piston displacement, and broke all existing sustained speed motorcycle records for distances above 500 miles.

During the gruelling test, held over a five-and-one-half-mile course on Muroc Dry Lake from midnight to midnight, the engine was never stopped and the only halts that were made were for fuel and oil and to change riders.

Two Los Angeles riders, Lief Rosenberg and Art Olsen, guided the motorcycle over the blistering course, made difficult to follow during the day by the mirages which placed markers at times far from their true position. Late in the afternoon Olsen at one time was prevented from running into the automobiles and improvised shelter of the contest committee by the watchfulness of those in charge. Later he said that a mirage had placed the vehicles in an entirely different position than they actually occupied. At night the riders were guided by a series of red, green and white lights.

The first lap was turned in six minutes for the five and one-half miles. In the first two hours, 112 miles were covered. The 1000-mile mark was passed in 17h. 53m. 8s. The final lap, which completed the twenty-four-hour run and brought the official mileage to 1301, was turned at a speed in excess of sixty miles an hour.

The intense heat of the desert during the mid-day made it necessary to change drivers every fifteen minutes and increased the fuel consumption, requiring more frequent stops for gasoline. As a result the initial high speed average of 59.1 miles per hour for the first eight hours was gradually reduced to 54.6 miles per hour for the entire run.

The Union Oil Company co-operated with the Super-X factory representatives in conducting the run, using the event to conduct field tests of gasoline and lubricants which they furnished for the test.

ZION PARK ROAD SOON WILL OPEN

from which Zion Canyon has been etched through eons of time by one small river.

Its completion will be celebrated on July 4. It accomplishes its purpose of shortening the distances between the three most colorful of all of the twenty-two national parks in the United States, and its formal dedication is to be part of the official business of the twenty-second annual National Governors' Conference opening the 30th inst. in Salt Lake City.

Driving to Zion from Los Angeles the route is 489 miles through Victorville and Barstow and over the Arrowhead Trail to St. George. From St. George the Arrowhead Trail is followed for another twenty-one and a half miles to Anderson's Ranch. Turning right here it is thirty-seven miles into the park.

Those who plan to attend the dedication ceremonies will do well to make reservations in advance as accommodations are limited at the park. Accommodations at St. George will also likely be crowded.

Please excuse occasional grammatical "errors" in our column. The chess editor "knows his English" but this chess stuff is strange to the compositors and even the proof readers slip up on us now and then. For instance, last Sunday "anthologist" should have read "anthology," etc., etc.

The Morphy birthday anniversary party at Sierra Madre a week ago Saturday was attended by close to two hundred people. In the afternoon a team match of twelve boards was played between Orange county, headed by E. P. Elliot of Fullerton, and Pasadena, headed by Prof. H. Bateman. The Oranges won 6½-5½. A simultaneous was given by Harry Borochow, former Los Angeles champ, he winning every one of the 18 games. Irving Spero, former Ohio champ, played three blindfold games, winning two and drawing one. The writer had the best job playing simultaneously against nine ladies. Somebody lost the score. In the evening G. S. G. Patterson, Los Angles champ, played simultaneously against 28, winning 31, losing 1, and drawing 10. At the end of four hours play many games were unfinished and had to be adjudicated. Experts from such distant points as Laguna, Riverside, Long Beach, etc., helped swell the crowd. Someone carried away a set which did not belong to him. Whoever made the mistake is asked to write the chess editor.

The Sierra Madre Chess Club of about a dozen members was started a few months ago by Mrs. Alice Sedgman. She and her charming daughter Olive are great boosters for the game. The club meets every Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, and sometimes Sunday afternoons, at the City Park house, West Central and Hermosa.

Herewith the game that was "cut" from last Sunday's column. Played in the recent Los Angeles-San Francisco match. John Tippin, 16-year-old expert, surprised our local champion.

Stanton Joins Tire Concern as Executive

Frank T. Price, president of Nelson & Price, Ltd., world's largest distributors of Dayton tires, has just announced the addition of Edward F. Stanton to the executive staff of the concern.

EDWARD F. STANTON

Stanton is well known in the financial world, wherein he has engineered some of the largest grocery store deals in the country. He founded the first self-service grocery stores in "the Grocerterias" as early as 1914. He recently sold his "Humpty Dumpty Stores," of which he was president, to the MacMarr concern. He still retains a managing directorship in the latter organization. He was also a director in the Piggly Wiggly Corporation. Stanton is regarded as one of the nation's leading authorities on chain store operation, and it will be in this department of the business that he will concentrate his efforts for Nelson & Price, Ltd., who now operate twenty-two stores in principal Southern California cities.

Pullen Takes Check Prize for Auto Test

As the result of a nation-wide demonstration of Willys six automobiles, during which they traveled 3,000,000 miles in one week, nine cash prizes have been awarded. Official word has been received by J. W. Leavitt & Co., Willys Overland distributor, announces Clair R. Savage, general manager. This check was turned over to Eddie Pullen, former racing pilot, who drove the Willys six on the demonstration runs here, it was stated.

During the tests here Eddie Pullen drove a stock Willys six from Los Angeles to San Diego, lacked in second gear, a distance of 122 miles, averaging 44.76 miles an hour. He drove the same car, again locked in second gear, from Los Angeles to San Francisco, 432 miles, averaging 46.17 miles an hour.

On the Bakersfield race track the car traveled 700 miles in 677 minutes in high gear, averaging sixty-two miles an hour for eleven hours and seventeen minutes.

Among the other outstanding tests was a speed run from Huntington, W. Va., to Toledo, O., a distance of 285 miles which was made in 318 minutes, beating the fastest train by two hours and three minutes. In a power test at Miami, Fla., a Willys six pulled a loaded freight car 300 feet.

CAREFUL DRIVING URGED

Father of Factory Method Visits Here

Developed Tire-Making Process

S. A. Steere (left,) manager of the cotton and textile division of International Goodyear, is credited with being father of the method used by that company in preparing the cotton cords for the tire carcass. It is a heavily advertised and valued process of the company. Center is P. K. Coe, president of Motor Tires and right is P. W. Beggs, superintendent of Goodyear's Los Angeles textile mills. Steere at one time held the position now occupied by Mr. Beggs.

Developer of Tire-Making Method Here

Ten years ago Sam A. Steere, then superintendent of the Goodyear-California Textile Mills, opened the first bale of cotton to be run through Goodyear's Los Angeles plant.

Now, ten years after this event, Mr. Steere, manager of the cotton and farbic division for International Goodyear, with headquarters at Akron, O., inspected the plant at Los Angeles with P. W. Beggs, present textile mill superintendent, and P. K. Coe, president, Motor Tires, Inc.

Mr. Steere developed Supertwist, Goodyear's patented method of twisting cotton during its manufacturing process for the purpose of giving longer life, added resiliency and greater shock-absorbing powers to tires.

Developments in the California Textile Mills since the day that Steere opened the first bale of cotton include:

First bale of cotton opened June 14, 1920.

Fifty million pounds of fabric finished April 22, 1930.

Production of finished fabric for May, 1930, amounted to 617,000 pounds.

Total finished fabric production for 1929 amounted to 7,007,370 pounds.

Cotton used in 1929, estimated on 500-pound bale basis, amounted to 13,182 bales.

All of the cotton consumed was obtained from Arizona and Southern California ranches.

The textile mills are now operating forty-eight hours per week with a yearly pay roll in excess of $642,000.

MARMON PRICES LOWERED

Reductions ranging up to $180 in the list prices of the Marmon-Roosevelt eight, are announced by G. M. Williams, president of the Marmon Motor Car Company.

With the new prices in effect immediately, the Marmon-Roosevelt price for the coupe at factory will be $950, and for the sedan $985. The entire line is the lowest in price of any line of automobiles ever produced by Marmon.

The reductions are a saving of $180 in the price of the convertible coupe and $150 in the price of the four-passenger Victoria coupe, both body styles now listing at $995 at the factory. The sedan is $60 cheaper than the old price and the two-passenger standard coupe has been reduced $45.

WHITE ANNOUNCES TWO NEW TRUCKS

Two new six-cylinder high-speed motor trucks, designed to cover the medium and heavy-duty hauling field, are announced by the White Company of Cleveland. Designated as Models 63 and 64, they cover the whole range of dump-truck work, city and intercity hauling and semi-trailer operation.

Fluid Protects Car Radiator

A new radiator solution, which treats the metal of the cooling system rather than the water that happens to be in the radiator at the time it is applied, and so offers a lasting cure for poor water circulation in a car, is now being offered to motorists from the Warner-Patterson laboratories. It is known as Radorite.

The water encountered by drivers in the Southwest causes the radiators of cars here to become clogged by sediment, slime and rust due to the chemical reactions, and this obstructing of the cooling system brings ills to the motor that the new Radorite will eradicate, according to the developers.

CANYON PARTLY CLOSED

Laurel Canyo, is closed between Mulholland High Way and Ventura Boulevard, advises the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Summer Rates by Stage Lines Now Made Low

Pickwick Greyhound Lines have announced that beginning Tuesday new low summer excursion rates would be placed in effect on the company's motor coach system between Los Angeles and New York, and intervening points, with correspondingly lower round-trip tariffs. The excursion rates will apply to both eastbound and westbound travel.

Announcement also was made that a new connecting link had been established between Pickwick Greyhound coaches at Flagstaff, Ariz., for Grand Canyon National Park, supplementing the link previously established at Williams.

BAKERSFIELD DETOUR

A short detour is necessary on United States Highway No. 99 in Bakersfield, due to the construction of a culvert across an irrigation canal.

Price at factory Others Standard and Special Sixes Standard and Special Eights up to $1595

Before equality with the Graham at these prices can be attained by any car, it must give you for your investment, in the $845 price class for example, a 66 h. p. engine with 207 cu. in. piston displacement as against the usual 55 to 62 h. p.; a seven-bearing crankshaft with 81.4 sq. in. of main-bearing area as against the usual four or five bearings; chain-driven generator and water pump as against a fan-belt drive; big 12-inch internal hydraulic brakes; a Graham body of the finest quality built in Graham's own plants to Graham quality standards; adjustable seats and foot pedals; 115-inch wheelbase as against a lesser wheelbase; four wide doors instead of two, and roomy comfort as against cramping and discomfort.

If it is an Eight at or near the Graham price, you are justified in asking it to match Graham in its 100 h. p. engine which gives the flexibility and power to produce such brilliant performance; in the Graham time-proved four-speed transmission which enables the Graham to do things literally impossible to other cars; in silent acceleration to 65 miles an hour in third gear—80 miles and better in fourth with amazing ease; in acceleration to 60 miles an hour in 19 seconds from a standing start; in a smooth, sure stop in 5 seconds from 60 miles an hour; in the finest body Graham knows how to build.

HELICOPTER TO BE GIVEN TEST

Curtiss-Wright to Try Out New Type Plane

Four Years' Experimental Work Performed

Scientists Intrigued With Idea for Centuries

Tests will be begun shortly on the Curtiss-Bleecker helicopter which has been under secret development in the Garden City factory of the Curtiss Aeroplane and Motor Company for four years.

This unusual machine is now in a hangar at the Curtiss-Wright Valley Stream Airport receiving final finishing touches before the start of a long series of tests to determine its efficiency and performance characteristics.

SCIENTISTS INTRIGUED

The problem of successful helicopter design is one that has intrigued scientists for centuries and that has undoubtedly attracted more attention and more original effort by investors than has any other phase of aeronautical design.

The first helicopter is said to have been designed in the Eighteenth Century and was used merely as a toy.

The true helicopter is a flying-machine that will be able to lift itself vertically off the ground, to hover indefinitely over a given spot, to descend vertically under its own power, and to achieve safe descent in event of engine failure, in addition to being able to move horizontally at satisfactory speed and to be controllable and satisfactorily stable under all flight conditions.

MACHINE DESCRIBED

There have been any number of helicopter designs that have successfully lifted themselves off the ground vertically and in some cases attained considerable altitudes, but so far as is known, there is none which has satisfactorily combined all of the other performance elements of the true helicopter to a degree that makes it a practical machine.

The Curtiss-Bleecker machine consists essentially of four large wings or blades, mounted at right angles to one another and revolving in a horizontal plane. The wings are caused to revolve by propellers, one to each wing, mounted forward of the leading edge, about two-thirds of the way out; the propellers are driven through a gear and shaft arrangement from one central "Wasp" air-cooled engine, mounted horizontally. To each of the wings are attached outrigger booms mounting small elevators or tail surfaces. Thus, each unit is in reality, a small airplane, consisting of a power-driven wing with a tail which can control the angle of incidence of the wing at any point.

CAN HOVER ALOFT

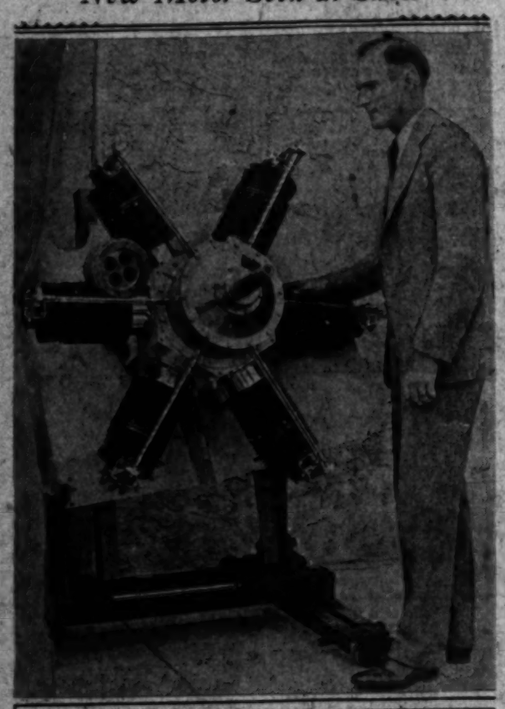
Beneath the four wings is suspended a small fuselage in which are located the crew and which is equipped with a fairly conventional type of landing-gear.

The wings are made to revolve by the pull of their propellers, whereas in the autogyro, the rotation of the wings is a result of the forward motion of the entire machine. This design difference means that the Curtiss-Bleecker machine can rise vertically off the ground without any run and can hover indefinitely over any spot, performances which cannot be accomplished with the autogyro.

Curtiss engineers will make no prediction as to the performance of the helicopter until flight trials are completed, beyond expressing their confidence that it will rise vertically, hover over a given spot, descend safely vertically, and move horizontally at reasonable speed.

This first machine has been designed primarily to meet these general requirements satisfactorily and has not been specifically designed to accentuate any particular feature of performance such as high speed, or rate of climb, or load-carrying ability, as is done in design of present-day aircraft. Such specialization can be accomplished once the general principles of the machine are established as correct. The preliminary tests will be conducted over a period of several weeks and will consist of a detailed check of the performance of every feature of the machine before actual flight trials are made.

New Motor Seen at Show



Light Weight Feature

One of the mechanical exhibits that is attracting much comment at the Pacific Coast Aeronautical Exposition, which opened yesterday in Oakland, is the new All-Weathers aviation motor, according to Henry Hultman, aviation expert of the Associated Oil Company. The new unit, which is being exhibited in the north for the first time this week, is a product of General Western Aero Corporation, Ltd., of Burbank.

BOMBER CONTRACT GOES TO DETROIT

The awarding of the contract for thirty-two navy bombers to cost $627,000, to the Detroit Aircraft Corporation by the Navy Department, marks the definite entrance of the company into the military and naval field.

BUSSES SERVE RESORT AREA

Motor Transit stages serve the entire San Jacinto Mountain and Hemet-San Jacinto Valley district. Four fast and convenient schedules daily each way to the above resorts and hotels furnish adequate service. Motor Transit busses provide a most economical and delightful way of travel to this region of scenic beauty.

WORK IN PROGRESS

Construction work in Arizona on United States Highway No. 66, between Seligman and Ashfork, is in progress.

NEW MOTOR FEATURE AT AIR SHOW

Four Valves and Decreased Total Weight Features of Engine

One of the outstanding mechanical displays of the Pacific Coast Aeronautical Exposition which opened yesterday at the Oakland Airport is the new All-Weathers aviation motor, a product of the General Western Aero Corporation, Ltd., of Burbank, according to word received from Henry Hultman, southern aviation representative for the Associated Oil Company, who is in the north attending the air show.

The chief advantage of this new power unit lies in the cylinder head, which is a four-valve arrangement. It has two intake valves which are located on opposite sides of the cylinders. The gas enters on one side and passes through the center of the head between the two exhaust valve manifolds, cooling the inside of the exhaust valve seats and the exhaust valve stem guides. The two exhaust valves being on opposite sides divide the heat between the two sides of the head, keeping the entire head at an even temperature.

Invented by C. L. Weathers, the motor follows conventional lines of six-cylinder, two-throw principle. The cylinders and cylinder heads are cast iron and the crankcase and rest of the parts, including pistons and connecting rods, are of aluminum alloys. One of the features is that the oil enters from the pump directly to the shaft and goes through the shaft, lubricating all the bearings, the pressure being taken off after it has passed over all the bearings. The only pressure line on the motor is through the gauge on the instrument board. Two Bosch magnetos furnish the ignition.

The All-Weathers motor will be standard equipment in a new type of plane which is to be turned out as a part of the General Western line. This will be a high-speed job of extreme lightness and durability, manufactured to sell in the low-priced field. The first model will soon be subjected to severe tests at the factory in Burbank, Cal.

Planes to be Used in Fire Fight Service

Airplanes will again be used for scouting fires in the national forests of California, according to Regional Forester S. B. Show of the San Francisco headquarters, United States Forest Service. Contracts have been approved with two commercial airplane transport companies to provide ships for forest fire control work. The Associated Airways, Ltd., operating from Goddard Field, Palo Alto, will provide a Stearman three-seat biplane and a three-seat high-wing monoplane for patrol duty in Northern California. Like service will be rendered in Southern California by the Aero Corporation of California, Inc., operating from their own field in Los Angeles with two Eagle Rock biplanes equipped with 200-horsepower Wright Whirlwind motors.

Contrary to general belief, said Mr. Show, airplanes are not used by the Forest Service for patrol over regular beats, but for scouting duty, although they are sometimes sent out to look for fires after heavy thunder and lightning storms and during periods of haze and smoke when the visibility from the ground fire lookouts in the forests is impaired. Their principal usefulness is for the reconnaissance of large going fires, as a forest officer in a ship at several thousand feet elevation can in a very short time determine the direction and rate of spread of a fire and on his return to the ground, or by dropping parachute messages, can inform the officer in charge of the fire where best to concentrate fire fighting efforts.

RIVER PASSABLE

The Mojave River crossing east of Hesperia is passable again. This makes it possible to drive to the lower end of Deep Creek without going into Victorville.

'STAR' BOAT WAITS FOR FISHERMEN

Large Craft Fitted With Numerous Conveniences to Attract Whole Family

In a picturesque setting in the north bay beneath the Santa Monica Hills the Star of Scotland, romantic world trader and of late one of the Alaska packers, awaits the vacationist.

This ship of steel 1000 tons greater than any other pleasure fishing ship on the west coast has been refitted into a palatial vacation headquarters for the deep-sea angler.

Far in advance of all other stationary ships in accommodations the Star of Scotland has in store for its visitors all the thrills, comforts and safety of an ocean liner where mother and the children can spend a day on the spacious sun deck lounging in steamer chairs while dad and brother make use of their fishing tackle baited with live bait from the fishing gallery along the sides of the huge vessel.

Located in the most favorable fishing grounds known in Santa Monica Bay the Star of Scotland is equipped to entertain visitors for a day, week or month.

A spacious main dining hall all done in white enamel with a dance floor adjoining, with its staterooms such as one will find only on first-class steamer accommodations and a service rendered equal to that of a modern hotel the Star of Scotland is a real addition to the outdoor life of Southern California.

Water taxi service is had from the Lick Pier at Ocean Park on the sturdy little launch Scotty, skippered by Roy Chrisman, veteran pilot and an experienced navigator.

Conveyor boat service is maintained daily at short intervals with service as late as midnight during week days and all night over the week-ends and holidays.

Every Type of Plane Shown

OAKLAND, June 28. (Exclusive) Every type of aircraft that flies the skies, from the little one-seater with folding wings and the tiny flying "bugs" or air flivvers to baby blimps and giant eighteen-passenger transport planes, are on display at the Pacific Coast Aeronautical Exposition at the Oakland Airport.

The show opened yesterday for a nine-day engagement.

Macmillan Buys Three Trucks

Three new gasoline trucks, representing a total investment of $24,000, were delivered yesterday to the Macmillan Petroleum Corporation as the first unit of a fleet designed to meet the increased demands caused by introduction of the new Macmillan gasoline in Southern California.

The new trucks, which represent the most modern innovation in gasoline transportation, have a capacity of 2700 gallons apiece, and will be kept in service virtually twenty-four hours a day, it was stated.

TINY PLANE SOON TO BE ON MARKET

Featherweight Ship to Be Ready for Sale at Early Date

Testing of the American Eagle, a featherweight airplane to be placed on the market soon by the American Eagle Aircraft Corporation, has been started at Fairfax Airport, Kansas City, Kan.

Powered with a two-cylinder engine developing twenty-five horsepower, the American Eagle will have a pay load characteristic of 175 pounds. It carries a passenger in a tandem seating arrangement with the pilot. Access to the passenger compartment will be through a door on the left side of the fuselage.

The fuselage is constructed of government approved steel tubing. The horizontal stabilizer and vertical fin are fixed. The wing, of the parasol type, carries one and one-half degrees dihedral and the center section gap is covered with celluloid.

PLANE TRIP BREAKS ANCIENT SUPERSTITION

BY ALMA WHITAKER

I'm an aviation travel addict. I mean, I even loved it when Maury Graham took me to Salt Lake nearly two years ago in an open plane, and they made me wear pants and high boots, and tied a parachute round my waist.

And I even loved it enough to come home from San Francisco in a Maddux plane on Friday the 13th, with all my friends saying: "My, you're plucky. Fancy tempting fate like that. Phew! Why, I'm scared to go up any old date . . . much less on a hoodoo day like that."

And you should have seen the tender last good-bys they wasted on me.

ALL SEATS TAKEN

The trip up reeked of luxury. Out at the Grand Central Air Terminal at Glendale the sun was shining, and the depot has all the efficiency and much more style and charm than a railroad depot. Curious crowds still lounge around to watch the descents and take-offs. That makes one feel nice and important, too. Every seat in the plane was taken, two people sitting on the little seat that unfolds across the door . . . sixteen, all told, including Capt. Jack Hewson and his mate, Bud Hoover, both very young men in rather nautical uniforms. The seats are leather arm chairs, built at a comfy slant, along the windows on either side, and there is room to walk up and down the aisle.

Three of us were women . . . one a smart New Yorker, who read with bliss indifference to the view, all the way up. Another I suspected of being the bride of the attentive young man . . . both watching everything. Three men looked as if they traveled this way all the time on business bent, and the rest were old gentlemen, feeling a little daring and modern.

SUMMER CLOTHES

We were all dressed in comfy summer walking clothes . . . none of the aviation trappings we all felt we had to wear two years ago. We were each allowed thirty pounds of luggage . . . and right here I can see where those bunchy old Pigrados gowns stand no chance of coming back. With the present modes, I was able to take an extra suit, an evening dress, a soft folding extra hat, and all the usual etceteras for each outfit, including shoes.

When we first rose above Los Angeles I wanted to snub the fresh air fiend who kept his window wide open . . . but fifteen minutes later it was warm and balmy, and we all opened ours, too. By the time we reached Bakersfield, it was very warm . . . and 165 on the ground. I thrilled at the sight of Bakersfield from the air, with that luscious little river! Shame on my pilots . . . they didn't know its name, although they had been doing this trip daily for months. But I later discovered it was the Kern River.

MATCH-BOX BUILDINGS

All the towns look like checkerboards, the buildings about as big as match boxes. We paused at Bakersfield to drop and pick up packages, but they didn't let us get out on the up trip. We also saw the havoc of the St. Francis Dam from the air, and sailed blithely over mountains and desert in quick succession, e'er we finally reached Fresno. Except the blase ones, we had all been busy writing letters on "In Flight" letterheads, for which that mate had lent us boards and pencils . . . so we mailed them in stylish air-mail envelopes at Fresno, where they let us stretch our legs for four minutes. After Fresno, the mate showed us a note which told us we could have sandwiches and coffee for 25 cents, and we just nodded our heads if we wanted them.

CAN'T BE HEARD

No conversation in airplanes . . . the whirr of the motors is too competitive. But one soon gets used to it . . . and after awhile it makes one feel pleasantly drowsy. The funny sensation in the ears as the plane descends passes with a nose blow . . . and actually seems to leave one's hearing sharper.

LAND AT EVENING

We were just finishing our twilight tiffin as we soared over Oakland, which looked utterly enchanted from the air in the golden sunset. We seemed to be flying right into the sunset for quite awhile after Fresno. We finally landed at the Alameda airport, where attentive officials awaited us. One can take a bus for $1.35 into San Francisco, so I found myself in a big Cadillac with seven men. We just missed a ferry and had to wait twenty minutes. The effect was so odd . . . after speeding through space at such a terrific rate for so long, with the whirring noisy motors . . . and then sitting there in dark and almost eery silence for twenty minutes.

On this account we were a wee bit late for dinner. Otherwise we could have left Los Angeles at 4 and dined in San Francisco at 7:30.

DARES BAD LUCK

Now that all happened on Wednesday, the 11th inst. From 9 that night until midnight Thursday, San Francisco was mine. So why wouldn't I postpone my return until Friday, the 13th inst? The bad luck would have been going home too soon.

But when I boarded the plane at 9 a.m., Friday the 13th inst., there was only one other passenger, a nervous young man, obviously under high excitement. No doubt about it, the superstitious are many and timid. All other days planes are full to capacity.

The trip was utterly enchanting to Bakersfield . . . we merely descended, but scarcely paused at Fresno. At Bakersfield we took on two more passengers, foreigners, a man and a young woman. They were in gay mood and obviously had no Friday the 13th obsessions. Then on we sailed toward Los Angeles . . . and presently the plane gave an unexpected dip. The nervous young man and I exchanged sheepish glances . . . we knew all about Friday the 13th. But nothing happened. Presently, when we were within half an hour of home, with the sun still glorious, our pilot took a radio message. Then he came to shout in our best ear that we had to turn back . . .

RETURN FOR SAFETY

Returned to Bakersfield, we all got out and heard the news. It seems a heavy fog hung over Los Angeles and we were to take no risks. It also became known that our foreign passengers had had the self-same experience the night before. They had been offered $10 to go to Los Angeles by train, but had preferred to wait.

While we were waiting for radio instructions to proceed, we all got acquainted. It seems the nervous boy had an engagement ring in his pocket and was on his way to propose to a girl in Los Angeles. He hadn't realized about Friday the 13th until he was about to board the plane. Then he was in a terror of anxiety. What a day to fly to one's lady love and pop the question!

We also discovered that the foreign passengers were from Santiago, Chili . . . but that they had never met before this trip . . . the man had come to the electrical convention and the girl is from a Santiago newspaper on a year's assignment. They were delightful people and we foresaw a budding romance.

An hour later we received radio instructions to proceed, happy in the knowledge that such precautions for us were possible. We landed at the Glendale airport at about 2 p.m., instead of 12:30, all safe and sound, still five hours ahead of the train.

I got the boy to promise to phone me if the engagement ring went on the right finger. It did. We have all decided Friday the 13th is sailing under a false reputation.

CHAMPIONSHIPS OPEN THURSDAY

Long Beach Scene of Clash for Swim Titles

Country's Leading Paddlers to Face Starter

Result on Records Looms as Entrants Warm Up

The 1930 national A.A.U. swimming and diving championships, [illegible]-day event which will bring together probably the greatest field ever collected outside of the Olympic Games, starts Thursday morning in Recreation Park, Long Beach.

Never before have such stars entered a national meet with the exception of an Olympic year. Outstanding pacific coast divers and fancy divers from as far east as the Atlantic Ocean and from as far north as Canada are gathered here for the meet, which is being held under the auspices of the young men's division of the Long Beach Chamber of Commerce and the city of Long Beach assured the success of the entire affair when it dug down for $25,000, plenty of money in any part of the country.

BUSTER CRABBE

What is more, the entire meet will be absolutely free to the public and the crowds which are certain to attend on the Fourth of July and again on Sunday are expected to be the largest ever to witness a swimming meet in this country. Accommodations will be available for 15,000.

The program for the Fourth is a [illegible] inviting ones with the 440-yard free style for men down as the feature. This event will bring together Clarence "Buster" Crabbe of the L.A.A.C., the hope of the Pacific Coast; Al Zorilla, Olympic champion from the New York A.C.; Reuddy, world's record holder from the New York A.C., and Austin Clapp, Hollywood Athletic Club. All four men were members of the 1928 Olympic team.

On the opening day, Thursday, the big event will be the men's 100-meter free-style. George Kojac who was inches behind Johnny Weissmuller when the latter set his world mark of 57.8, is the favorite but the New York A.C. boy will have to outpaddle such stars as Jimmy Howland, captain of the Yale team, and Al Swartz, Illinois A.C., leader of the intercollegiate champions from Northwestern University. Walter Spence will not defend this title but he would have trouble placing against such competition.

The events have been spread over the four days so that outstanding stars such as Crabbe, Kojac, Zorilla and the feminine leaders, Helene Madison of Seattle and Josephine McKim of the L.A.A.C., will be able to enter for four races. Crabbe is the defending 440, 880, one-mile and medley champion and Buster has his work cut out for him. Zorilla and Ruddy are the eastern middle-distance champions and both of them are gunning for the Mercury ace.

Miss McKim defends her 440, and one-mile titles against Helen Madison, the Seattle sensation, who is competing in her first outdoor meet. The northern girl only started national swimming in March but since then has lowered nine world marks and is the red-hot favorite to win not only all Miss McKim titles but the 100-meter championship as well. She is in a class by herself.

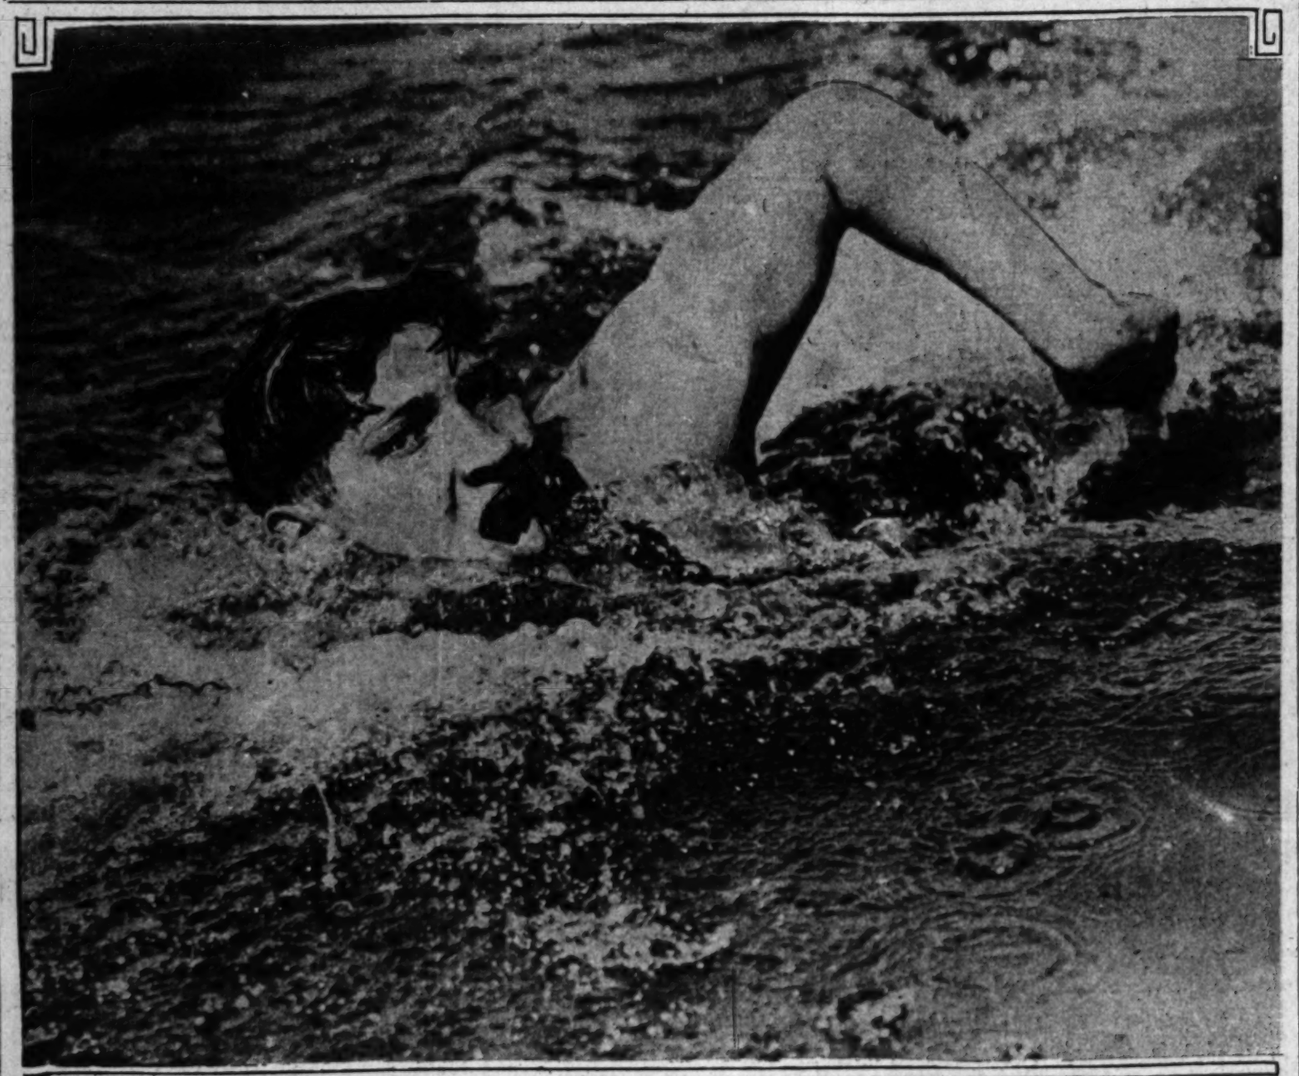
ANOTHER HUMAN FISH

That's what they are calling George Kojac, of the New York Athletic Club swimming team, who is in Los Angeles training for the 1930 National A.A.U. swimming and diving championships, which are to be held at Long Beach starting Thursday. The meet will last through until next Sunday. Although Kojac's name isn't among the defending title-holders, swimming fans claim that he will take more than one championship back to Gotham. He is a great free-style swimmer as well as a backstroke artist.



BALLOU BLANKS INDIANS; STARS NAB FIFTH IN ROW

Barbee Swats Homer to Put Locals Ahead

BY BOB RAY

Just an old Hollywood custom. Yep, Oscar Vitt's scrappy Sheiks humbled the Solons again yesterday, running up a 7-to-6 triumph to make it five straight wins over the erstwhile league-leaders.

DAVE BARBEE

The Hollywood victory proved just a bit more help to the Angels, who are now two full games in front of Buddy Ryan's sinking Senators.

In winning the Stars triumphed over Ray Keating, Sac spitball specialist, who has scored five shutouts so far this season. Keating lasted less than five innings against the Hollywood attack, retiring in the fifth after the Stars had staged a three-run rally to break a 4-all tie. The Stars got only nine hits but they made them in the right places off Keating, Ed Bryan blanking them the remainder of the contest.

BARBEE'S SIXTH HOMER

Dave Barbee, who hits 'em from village to village, provided the wallop that put the Stars in front. Barbee broke the deadlock in the fifth when, with Brannan on second, he hoisted one of Keating's pitches high into the bleachers for his sixth circuit clout since he joined the Stars a week ago last Wednesday. Mickey Heath also hit a homer for the Sheiks.

Old Hankus-Pankus Hulvey officiated on the mound for the Stars at the start but got into trouble in the sixth and was replaced by Augustus Johns, the square-shouldered southpaw. Johns put down the sixth-inning uprising in workmanlike order, but was touched for two runs before the game ended, although he was never in real trouble.

Sacramento scored four runs in the third inning to get a

SEATTLE, June 28.—When these Angels from Los Angeles start anything they do it right. They started hitting in the fifth inning and before they had stopped they had scored eight successive base hits off Elmer Hanson and Paul Zahniser. The eight straight included five doubles.

WIN BALLOU

Needless to say, the Angels won the game, 9 to 0, when Win Ballou scattered eight hits so well that the Indians couldn't even smell a run.

And if you think the Angels didn't hit, look over this list: George Harper, home run and single; Ray Jacobs, three singles and a walk; Carl Dittmar, double, single, two walks and a sacrifice fly; Wes Schulmerich, walk, hit by pitched ball and a double; Arnold Statz, double and a single; Frank Sigafoos, double; Win Ballou, double; Truck Hannah, double, hit by pitched ball and a walk. That's a pretty good day's work.

The eight successive hits were split over two innings, inasmuch as Schulmerich was out stretching and Statz was caught stealing.

ZAHNISER CHASED

That pretty well tells the story. Zahniser started pitching and wasn't scored on until the fourth. After that the Angels scored about as they pleased.

The Angels now lead in the series, four games to one, with a doubleheader scheduled for tomorrow.

About the only other things of interest were the fielding of Harper, who robbed Bill Lawrence of a triple in the third, and Jimmy Mitchell's debut as a Coast Leaguer. The former local high-school youngster finished up at second base.

The Angels played with one eye

Babe Ten Days Ahead of His Record Year in 1927

NEW YORK, June 28. (AP)—Babe Ruth's two home runs, which brought his total for the season to twenty-nine and put him ten games and as many days ahead of his 1927 record, were only the final flourishes today to the pair of severe beatings the Yankees inflicted on the Cleveland Indians. The scores of the games were 13 to 1, and 14 to 2.

Henry Johnson gave the Indians only seven hits in the first game, while Roy Sherid excelled that performance in the second, allowing but five. The Yankees started each game by scoring seven runs in the first inning. Johnson capped the first game rally by hitting a home run and Chapman repeated in the second.

GALLANT FOX WINS AGAIN

Sande Pilots Unbeaten Three-Year-Old to Victory in Dwyer Stakes at Aqueduct Track

BY ORLO ROBERTSON
Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK, June 28. (AP)—Again answering the challenge to their greatness Gallant Fox and Earl Sande continued on their way today in the parade through the 3-year thoroughbred field as they won the Dwyer Stakes and $11,500 at Aqueduct.

Four colts, meeting the Fox and his great riding partner for the first time, strove to match strides with the brilliant son of Sir Galahad III, from William Woodward's stable, but they were no more successful than thoroughbreds that took up the issue in the Belmont Stakes, the Kentucky Derby, Preakness or Wood Memorial.

GALLANT FOX

Gallant Fox had no Whichone with which to contend, as he did in the Belmont, but his gallop over the mile and one-half of Aqueduct turf was just as impressive as if the Harry Payne Whitney colt had been present. At times the great champion showed signs of wanting to take matters easy, but Sande used his whip freely and the Fox responded with that burst of speed which has carried him through his three-year-old career undefeated.

A field of three named overnight grew to five at post time with the addition to Gifford A. Cochrane's Zenofol and the Sage Stable's Bannerette. It was Zenofol that furnished what little opposition Gallant Fox had as he swung down the stretch leading by several lengths.

The veteran jockey, Bill Kelsey sent Cochrane's colt up fast in the stretch, but Sande called on the Fox, using the whip, with the result that Gallant Fox went on to win by a length and one-half, in the good time of 2m. 32 2-5s. Zenofol defeated the Rancocas Stable's Limbus six lengths for the place. Flaming was fourth and Bannerette fifth and last.

Faster and harder-fought races may have been run in the Dwyer but never did a more popular horse win despite the prohibitive short odds held against Gallant Fox.

LATONIA (Ky.) June 28. (AP)—Gallant Knight, owned by the Audley Farm, today won the Latonia Derby by easily running away from a small field of seven entrants. Winner also of the Fairmont Derby, Gallant Knight added $22,175 to his total earnings by finishing two and one-half lengths ahead of Playtime in the forty-eighth renewal of the Latonia Derby.

The derby was run over a mile and one-half course and featured the opening day's program of Latonia's summer meeting. The time was 2m. 35s.

Collondon finished third. Reveille Boy, which took Gallant Knight's measure in the American Derby at Chicago, never threatened.

DON MOSES REGISTERS AT TROY FOR SUMMER

Any reports that Don Moses would not be a candidate for the Trojan football varsity next September were put to rest yesterday when the big, blond fullback registered for the summer session courses at the university, and declared he would be back, and eligible, when Coach Howard Jones called for the first practice.

Moses was on the squad last year, but suffered a lot of hard luck, starting in the summer when he broke a bone in his ankle. Don isn't going to take any chances this summer, and has procured a job as manager of a miniature golf course, which doesn't offer any dangerous hazards to ambitious athletes.

The blond husky will give Jones two smashing fullbacks for duty, in the persons of Jim Musick and himself, thus adding to the array of flashy backfield talent already on hand.

BEARS TAKE TENNIS TITLE

Dolf Muehleisen and Bob Muench Defeat Oregon Pair to Capture Doubles Championship in National Intercollegiate Net Tournament

HAVERFORD (Pa.) June 28. (AP) In a match that bristled with sparkling tennis Clifford Sutter from Tulane University, today defeated Julius Seligson of Lehigh, to win the national intercollegiate tennis singles championship. The scores were 6-3, 3-6, 6-2, 8-6.

BOB MUENCH

Sutter captured the title Berkeley Bell of the University of Texas was prevented from defending when he went to Europe with the United States Davis Cup team.

Sutter was trailing in the fourth set, 5-2, with delivery against him when he changed his tactics of matching Seligson in deep driving, to play at the net.

This bit of strategy proved the touchstone that gave him the victory, for he was able to score points on sharply angled volleys and overhead smashes. He broke through in the eighth game and from that point on he was Seligson's master, though the Lehigh youth won the eleventh game by breaking through after it went to deuce.

The Far West shared honors with the South when Dolf Muehleisen and Bob Muench, University of California, won the doubles title, defeating Stanley Almquist and Sherman Lockwood, University of Oregon, 6-3, 6-2, 12-14, 7-5.

SHAMROCK V LOSES ANOTHER YACHT RACE

HUNTERS QUAY (Scotland) June 28. (AP)—The Shamrock V, Sir Thomas Lipton's challenger for the America Cup, lost for the second straight time today in a race for big yachts on the Clyde. The Shamrock finished 3m. 12s. behind the Luluworth on corrected times. White Heather was third.

Today's defeat was the fourth for the Shamrock V since she was launched over two months ago.

CALIFORNIA GIRL WINS COLLEGE TENNIS CROWN

BROOKLINE (Mass.) June 28. (AP) Josephine H. Cruickshank of the University of California gained the girls' intercollegiate singles tennis title by defeating Marjorie L. Sachs of Radcliffe College and Cambridge, the former north and south champion, 6-1, 6-0, here today, at the Longwood grass courts.

The California girl, who ranks tenth nationally, lost the opening game of the match on her own service at love. She then started her hard-driving game to both sides of the court and won the remaining eleven games without great effort, despite the fact that two games in the second set, the second and fourth, went to deuce five times. Miss Cruickshank outscored her Radcliffe opponent by a 26-to-11 point margin in the first set and 34-17 in the second, which she took at love.

The tournament, which failed to attract Marjorie Gladman of the University of Southern California, east to defend her 1929 title, was dominated at every stage by Miss Cruickshank, who advanced through four rounds before dropping a single game. This amazing streak continued until yesterday when Katherine Park, Smith junior from Englewood, N. J., won three games in the semifinal match with the California star.

Miss Cruickshank joined forces with Dorrance Chase, Simmons student, and gained the doubles title by defeating Miss Sachs and Fanny Curtis, after a hard fight. The scores were 6-2, 5-7, 6-3.

The victors dropped the second set when Miss Cruickshank tired and, though she rallied for the third, the victory was largely due to Miss Chase's sparkling tennis.

Miss Sachs and Miss Curtis entered the final bracket early this afternoon when they eliminated the all-Smith team of Catherine Weiner of Philadelphia, and Virginia Watson, Milwaukee, by 6-2, 6-2 margins.

Close of First Week's Wimbledon Play Finds Americans in Strategic Positions

BY FRANK H. KING
Associated Press Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON (Eng.) June 28. (AP)—When the big canvas cover that protects the precious turf of the famous center court was drawn into place tonight at the close of the first week's play in the Wimbledon championships, the names of American players dotted the final stages of the draw sheets. Unless untoward events occur next week at least three 1930 Wimbledon titles are likely to go to the United States.

And that isn't counting on a possible victory for Big Bill Tilden over Henri Cochet, reigning singles champion, but only on Helen Wills Moody winning her fourth women's singles title in as many years, Wilmer Allison and John Van Ryn repeating their men's doubles triumph of last season, and the new firm of Mrs. Moody and Elizabeth Ryan taking the women's doubles crown.

HENRI COCHET

The Tilden-Cochet final is in prospect for next Saturday and, although the tall American was given a stiff fight during some stages of his match today against Ed Andrews, equally tall and considerably more massive New Zealander, Tilden's rare gifts for the game were his sallies in tight corners and he won three straight sets, 6-4, 6-4, 6-2.

FIVE IN SINGLES

Tilden was the fifth American to reach the final eight in the men's singles play, George Lott having gained his niche by beating the South African, P. D. B. Spence, 6-1, 6-3, 10-8. Spence, a canny veteran, has played only intermittent tennis lately and across the net from the Chicago youth today appeared sorely in need of practice.

Lott's skimming drives and aggressive tactics gave him mastery until the third set when he allowed Spence to pull up from 4 to 1 in

Southern California Junior Olympic Games Champions Leave Tonight for Atlantic City

NATIONAL MEET GOAL OF BOYS

Championships to be Held July 7 to 12

John F. Ness of "Times" in Charge of Party

Hawaiians Chief Foes of Local Stars

BY BRAVEN DYER

Bound for Atlantic City to participate in the national championships of the Junior Olympic Games, four Southern California youngsters pull out of Los Angeles this evening. Departure will be made at 6:15 o'clock from the Central Station.

Those making the trip are Sam Waxman of Los Angeles, Louis Haley of San Bernardino, Joe Andrade of Calexico and Johnny Lee of Highland Park. Waxman won the senior title with 667 points, followed by Haley with 650. Andrade was crowned Southern California junior champion after a great fight with Lee, the score being 625 to 624.

In charge of the local party will be John P. Ness of The Times, who will have as his chief aide Arthur Dietz, well-known local playground director.

The boys will be gone approximately seven weeks. Following the national finals at Atlantic City which are to be held from July 7-12, the local youngsters will go to New York and board a Panama Mail steamship for the twenty-eight-day ocean cruise to Latin America. Present plans call for return here on August 14 or 15, next, via the Panama Canal.

The Los Angeles Times, sponsoring the Junior Olympic Games in Southern California for the third successive season, is bearing the expenses of the trip for the local champions. Last year The Times sent four boys to the Hawaiian Islands.

Chicago will be the first stop for Ness and his youngsters this week. A day will be spent at Northwestern University where the boys will train as guests of the Northwestern General Alumni Association. Guy Goodman, who treated The Times party so royally last year, will again handle all arrangements.

It appears that the Hawaiian delegation, which left here Friday night, will offer our local champions the toughest kind of competition. More of this next Sunday, but the fact remains that Yamamoto's total of 677 exceeds Waxman's best and Ouchi's score of 668 is far ahead of Andrade's 625. A complete analysis of the Southern California boys' chances, as compared with that of the Hawaiians, will be made next Sunday.

GOING GUNNING FOR NATIONAL TITLES

Here are the Southern California Junior Olympic Games champions, Waxman, Haley, Andrade and Lee, along with the title-holders from the Hawaiian Islands. Ray Williams of the Alexandria Hotel, where the visitors stayed during their stop here, is shown wishing the Hawaiian youngsters good luck at Atlantic City. The local champs leave tonight for the New Jersey town where the national championships will be held July 7 to 12.

YANK NETTERS LEAD ABROAD

games to lead him and play for the set point at 5-6 and 'vantage, but Lott pulled out and finally won the set, 10-8.

Lott's game today—and particularly that of the smashing, hard-hitting Allison and Van Ryn in the doubles—was typical of the American type of tennis seen all week at Wimbledon, tennis typified by severe hitting in every type of stroke and by every player, from Helen Moody's effortless drives, which at their strongest all but knocked her opponents off their feet, to the strong attack of men such as Gregory Mangin, Van Ryn and Johnny Doeg. Tilden has power if he cares to summon it but the variety of his strokes is his court strategy and his deft, delicate touches still give him unrivaled place among the Americans as a matinee attraction for the Wimbledon crowds, but their wagers are likely to be on the machine-like Frenchman, Cochet, if the two meet next Saturday.

COCHET FAVORED

What Tilden can do at his best is a question often asked at Wimbledon, but with Cochet winning through all his early rounds with ease he is still very much of a favorite despite the great record of play Tilden has established in Europe in the past six months. Tilden's next opponent will be J. C. Gregory, who is Great Britain's only representative in the final eight and if he wins he faces Jean Borotra or George Lott in the semifinals.

In the upper half of the draw are Cochet and three Americans. The Frenchman must beat Allison to meet the winner of the Mangin-Doeg match. In women's singles Mrs. Moody dominates her half of the draw where the others are Phillis Mudford, her next opponent, Joan Ridley and Mme. Mathieu of France. The lower half comprises Betty Nuthall and Elizabeth Ryan, Helen Jacobs and Cecelle Aussem, the German star.

Only three rounds of the men's doubles have been played and there are four American pairs still in the running. The title-holders, Allison and Van Ryn, who whipped the Japanese pair, Timeo Abe and Takeichi Harada today, 6-3, 6-4, 6-4, have as companions George Lott and Johnny Doeg, Berkeley Bell and Gregory Mangin, and Tilden, who is paired with the Dutchman, Hans Timmer.

Mrs. Moody and Elizabeth Ryan, Edith Cross of San Francisco and Sarah Palfrey of Boston also have reached the third round of the women's doubles, while Allison and Miss Cross, Mangin and Miss Palfrey, and the Anglo-American pair Jack Crawford and Miss Ryan, are in the third round of the mixed doubles.

Monday's play includes Tilden against J. C. Gregory, Allison against Cochet, Mangin against Doeg and Borotra against Lott in the singles.

GOOD FISHING HOLES LISTED

All Streams Reported Far Away from Town

BY CEPH SALISBURY
Auto Club of Southern California

Anglers who are looking for good fishing near by will be disappointed, but the angler who is anxious to get out with his camping outfit along some well-shaded, rippling stream with an idea of perhaps wetting his line and trying a few casts, has a choice of many fine camping sites in near-by mountains and canyons.

For the latter type of sportsman we would suggest that he plan a trip to any of the following streams: Matilija Creek, Ventura River, Sespe River and Piru Creek of Ventura county. Big Tujunga, Big Rock Creek above Valyermo; the South Fork of Big Rock Creek; San Gabriel River, San Dimas Creek and San Antonio Creek above Camp Baldy, of Los Angeles county. Lytle Creek, Mill Creek above Forest Home; Santa Ana River above Seven Oaks; Deep Creek, reached by a half-mile hike from the end of the automobile road and camp ground, and Bear Creek, also reached by a hike from several different camp sites; also Arrowhead Lake and Big Bear Lake of San Bernardino county.

Excellent camp sites will be found either along or adjacent to these streams which offer a possibility of a few small trout to the experienced or lucky fisherman.

A little farther distant are the streams and camp sites of Riverside county. The North Fork of San Jacinto River, the South Fork of San Jacinto River, Strawberry Creek, Tahquitz Creek, Dark Canyon Creek and Snow Creek offer excellent camp sites and an excuse for a fishing trip.

SAN DIEGO GOOD

San Diego county lakes entice the fisherman who will take a longer trip. Perch fishing at Lake Henshaw has been good, but few bass have been taken. Moreno, Lower Otay and Sweetwater produced only fair catches. With clear, warm weather black bass should be taken in numbers from these waters. Hodges Lake has furnished some nice perch and a few bass this week. Murray and Barrett—the trout lakes of San Diego county, have produced only a few nice catches to the most experienced old-timers. Cuyamaca and Lake Wohlford have not been good so far this season. Many anglers have been enjoying the evening fishing at the Rainbow Angling Club during the past two weeks and are loud in their praise of this fishing. Many leave the city after business hours, driving to Azusa to the Rainbow Angling Club for dinner and then catch a limit of trout after dinner. Fishing is allowed at the Rainbow Angling Club until 9 o'clock in the evening.

Reports from Owens Valley district would develop enthusiasm and anticipation in the most cynical angler. General weather is reported clear and warm with just enough cooling breezes to be pleasant. The streams are much lower and clearing rapidly, and good fishing is being had in the following: Owens River (Big Springs, Alpers and Arcularius', Gorge, Chalk Bluff,) Rush, Hot, Robinson, Green, Convict, Rock, Bishop and Big Pine creeks. West Walker is getting much lower and clearing. The following lakes have furnished good catches: Topaz, Twin (Bridgeport,) June, Grant, Silver, Twin (Mammoth,) Mary, George, Rock Creek, Convict, South, North, Ruhway, Chocolate, Tyee, Big Pine, Virginia and Parker. Hilton lakes report some dandy catches out of the second and fifth lakes, and that all ten lakes will be open soon.

OTHER DISTRICTS

Jordan Hot Springs report fishing in that district has been good for the past week, and Kern River is very good, also that Nine-Mile Creek has furnished some good catches.

Trails are open now to the back country, and parties already packed in report fishing there great; weather for camping is ideal, and just right evenings to sit around the camp fire.

These are kind words to the golden trout fisherman who is planning a pack trip into his favorite golden trout waters. Golden trout season opens July 1, and parties planning a pack trip, should make arrangements immediately with their packer and guide for saddle and pack animals.

Fishing in the Kern River adjacent to Fairview, has not been good. The water is getting lower and clearing, however, and should improve from now on.

Fishing in all branches of Kaweah River good during the past week; many limits of rainbow, eastern brook and loch leven trout were taken. Many of the higher lakes were also popular with anglers, including Twin Lakes, Heather and Emerald lakes. L. F. Cook, chief ranger of Sequoia National Park, reports camping and fishing conditions are now ideal in Sequoia National Park.

Good catches are reported from Huntington Lake, Florence Lake, and Big Creek. The road to Florence Lake and Kaiser Pass is now open and in fair condition.

Bass Lake reports bass and crappie fishing improved over the week-end; nearly everyone taking some fish.

Fly fishing is now excellent at Wawona; South Fork of Merced River producing fine catches. Big Creek has offered many limit catches of fair-sized trout. Good fishing is also had in Alder, Bishop and Rush creeks.

Merced River on the floor of Yosemite Valley has been fair to good. Merced and Washburn lakes reached only by trail, have been good.

OCEAN FISHING

Ocean fishing, while somewhat temperamental according to the weather conditions, is steadily improving. Live-bait boats operating off Santa Monica, Ocean Park, Long Beach, Redondo, Hermosa, Manhattan, Balboa, report bass, halibut and barracuda taken, also a few white sea bass and trout. Barge fishermen have had good fishing for mackerel, some barracuda and halibut, also a few rock bass, sculpin, bonita and sanddabs.

Pier fishermen report catches as follows: Bonita and perch, good; halibut and mackerel, fair; barracuda, few.

Surf fishermen have taken some corbina, yellowfin and spotfin and report fishing improving.

Yellowtail have not been caught in numbers, but several scaling around fifteen pounds have been taken. With the coming of warmer weather, yellowtail fishing should become good, although the big catches cannot be anticipated before the middle of July.

Several broadbill swordfish have been sighted off Balboa the past week, but have not been induced to strike so far. Reports received from San Diego county give evidence of fair surf fishing, fair bait boat fishing, fair pier fishing, and good barge fishing.

MAMAUX SUCCEEDS TRIS

NEWARK (N. J.) June 28. (AP)—The appointment of Al Mamaux, veteran pitching ace, as manager of the Newark club of the International League was announced today by President J. P. Sinnott. Mamaux succeeds Tris Speaker, who resigned last week.

DUNLAP BEATS MOLLER

Princeton Youth Stages Great Rally to Win Over Notre Dame Rival, 5 and 4

BY BRIAN BELL
Associated Press Sports Writer

OAKMONT (Pa.) June 28. (AP)—George T. Dunlap, Jr., was only a Princeton student this morning, but this afternoon he was a supergolfer coming from behind in one of the most sensational rallies in any first-grade competition to win the intercollegiate championship of America.

He defeated Lawrence Moller, Notre Dame, 5 up and 4 to play.

After the little blond East Orange (N. J.) youth had been on the defensive all morning against the steady golf of Moller, he won seven straight holes in the afternoon and changed his status from 5 down to 2 up.

After that he was never headed. Moller, a stocky lad from Quincy, Ill., refused to crack, but he could not stand up against the barrage of 3s and 4s laid down by the Tiger from Old Nassau.

Dunlap was 4 down after the first eighteen holes of the thirty-six-hole match. His start in the afternoon round could hardly have been worse. For the first time in a week's play he sent his tee shot at the nineteenth flying out of bounds and with a penalty of stroke and distance he lost the hole, and was 5 down.

George played the twentieth in par 4, while his Notre Dame opponent took three putts and a 5. At the twenty-first Dunlap bagged a birdie 3 and followed with a birdie 4 at the twenty-second. A par 4 was just enough to win the twenty-third and a birdie 2 at the twenty-fourth squared the match.

A par 4 at the twenty-fifth and Dunlap went up for the first time during the day's play. He increased his advantage one hole by putting his tee-shot on the twenty-sixth and after a half in par 5s at the twenty-seventh, the final homeward trek was started with Dunlap 2 up.

COACHES WILL START SCHOOL

Trojan Summer Sessions for Mentors to Open

Three noted Trojan coaches, all of whom have directed championship teams during the past season, will conduct a summer coaching course for six weeks starting tomorrow on the University of Southern California campus, it was announced yesterday by Director of Athletics Bill Hunter.

Howard Jones will conduct the work in football, Dean Cromwell will direct it in track and Sam Barry will have charge of baseball and basketball.

The course, for which several score high school and college coaches have already enrolled, will open with a week devoted to basketball, followed by a week of baseball, with theoretical study and practical demonstrations being presented. The third week of the course, from July 14 to 19, will be devoted to track-and-field athletics, with classroom work and demonstrations on Bovard Field being given by Coach Cromwell.

The last three weeks of the course starting July 21 will be given over to football, with morning periods being devoted to theory and afternoon hours being used in field work. The course is known as coaching athletics and is prepared under the direction of the Trojan physical education department, with regular summer session credit being given those who work for it. Auditors—those who wish to listen in on all or any part of the work without seeking college credit—may also enroll for the course.

CITY TOURNEY ON TAP SOON

Griffith Park to be Scene of Golf Event

Fay Coleman to Defend His Links Title

Santa Monica Tournament Under Way Soon

BY THE GOLPHER

Golfers who are scanning the horizon for new worlds to conquer can begin sharpening up their weapons again for several tournaments appear on the latest schedule to find its way into the sanctum of the writer.

First on the list is the third annual Santa Monica Bay district championship slated for Clover Field. Qualifying rounds may be played from July 4 to 13, inclusive.

AT GRIFFITH PARK

Next in order, and first in importance is the sixteenth annual Los Angeles city championship, billed for July 14 to 20, inclusive, at Griffith Park.

Sandwiched in between comes the Southern California junior championship at the popular California Country Club on July 7, 8 and 9.

If that's not enough to keep the average golfer busy for the next three weeks there are new miniature courses blooming each day to be tried out.

Qualifying rounds for the city championship must be played on July 14 or 15 over the Woodrow Wilson Memorial course. Qualifying will be according to handicap, with thirty-two in the championship flight. There will be ten flights in all and Ollie Painter announced last night that thirty-four prizes will be awarded. This is considerable of an increase over last year when twenty-six were passed out.

Fay Coleman of the California club will defend his title and figures to get plenty of competition for a number of men are playing splendid golf right now, among them Bud Eichelberger, Jack Gaines, Phil Carter, Lester Coleman, Bill Jelliffe and Danny Sangster.

The event is open to any golfer with an established and bona fide handicap and entries may be made by calling Jack Bird at OLympia 1503.

ONCE A WEEK

Following conclusion of the qualifying rounds at Santa Monica on July 13, match play will start with entrants taking part in one round each week until competition is concluded.

Bill Jelliffe won the Santa Monica event last year, while Lester Coleman copped the season before. Manager George Basil states that he expects the entry list this year to exceed that of 1929 when 254 played in the tournament.

The Southern California junior championship is open to boys who have not reached their eighteenth birthday by July 7, next. The tournament gets under way with the qualifying round on July 7, followed by two rounds of match play the next day and the semifinals and finals on July 9. Competition for father-and-son teams will also be held on July 9, it being eighteen holes of medal play with one ball for the combination to rap around the course.

FOX HILLS TO HOLD TOURNEY JULY 4

The Fox Hills Country Club will celebrate the Fourth of July with an elaborately planned celebration, according to E. C. Caudill, manager of the popular Culver City club.

There will be an appropriate flag tournament open for men and women, and in the afternoon a magician will perform sleight-of-hand tricks to entertain the children. Later a dinner-dance will be held to be climaxed with a wonderful display of night fireworks. Members and their guests are expected to tax the facilities of the club to the utmost. Many additional surprise features are now being arranged.

PHILADELPHIA TAKES TURN VEREIN TITLE

BUFFALO (N. Y.) June 28. (AP)—The Philadelphia Turn Verein today won the championship of the thirty-fourth national turnfest of the American Turnerbund.

Winning the championship in the week's events, in which 3000 athletes from all parts of the country have participated, the Philadelphia society became permanent possessor of the golden wreath, emblematic of national team supremacy, having won it twice before during the past twenty-four years.

McLAUGHLIN, HERRERA CLASH AT ONTARIO

Al Herrera, Ontario's fighting ace, has been signed to meet Mickey McLaughlin in the top spot at Ontario next Wednesday night. Neither Herrera nor McLaughlin have been defeated at the arena. Leo Dominguez will meet Paster Calope in the semi-wind-up. The special event between Chief Semu Huaute and Jack Kay is a rematch. The Chief won the last encounter and had Kay on the floor. Kay seeks revenge. Two fours start the fireworks.

PAUL BUNYAN WINS

CHICAGO, June 28. (AP)—Paul Bunyan, an outsider, carrying the silks of L. M. Severson, today won the $10,000 Francis H. Peabody Memorial Handicap as the racing season closed at Washington Park. C. B. Irwin's Ironsides, son of Man o' War, finished second, with R. Cardwell's Lady Broadcast third.

The SPORT LIGHT by Grantland Rice

(Copyright, 1930, by North American Newspaper Alliance.)

A SONG OF SPORT

Hail and farewell! And that, my friend, is all,
Fame and then silence—past the final thrust;
Today you hear the endless millions call,
To turn and find the laurel thick with dust.

Now from the heights they look down on the world,
Unknowing as they seek for higher flight
How soon their broken banners will be furled
Along the weary road that leads to night.

Here, then, is luck—not for some brighter crown,
Nor greater glory which they hope to gain;
But when at least they break, and flutter down,
The ghost of one fine dream that isn't pain.

The Best in the Game

An energetic searcher for the truth has written in to ask an opinion on several subjects pertaining to our national pastime. He wants to know about as follows:

(1.) What team has the best catcher?

(2.) What team has the best infield?

(3.) What team has the best outfield?

(4.) What team has the best pitching staff?

Here are the answers as they happen to look from this outpost:

(1.) The Athletics, with Mickey Cochrane.

(2.) The New York Giants, with Terry, Critz, Jackson and Lindstrom.

(3.) Close to a toss-up between the Cubs with Stephenson, Wilson and Cuyler, and the Athletics with Simmons, Miller and Haas.

(4.) A matter that has yet to be proved for 1930, where pitching all along the line has been so erratic.

Defending Champions

The easy summer Mack's Athletics and McCarthy's Cubs fell heir to in 1929 will not be repeated in 1930. The Athletics should win again and the Cubs have a better chance than any other single club, but the latter margin is extremely slim with the Dodgers and the Giants on the trail.

The main reason for the big chance is the improvement of the Yankees and the Senators, especially, in the American, and the same uplift on the part of the Dodgers and the Giants. The Brooklyn club is the most improved outfit in baseball over a year ago.

The Athletics are still the class of baseball. The Cubs have proved their class by pounding along in the face of a double disaster—the loss of Carlson and the injury to Hornsby. Both defending champions can be counted on in the rougher going that will come later.

About Tilden

Bill Tilden's tennis game is almost as good as it ever was. What he has lost in the way of speed and dash is almost matched by his greater experience and control. The hard handicap that Tilden has to face is the toll of the years taken in the closing matches of a hard tournament. He might be favored to beat even a Cochet on the first or second day. But as one passes 35 or 36 one doesn't recover quite as quickly from weariness—not only physical weariness, but also the nerve strain.

When you recall the fact that Tilden was a first-class tennis player sixteen years, even eighteen years ago, you get some idea of how long he has made those wiry legs carry him over the ground.

Tilden has been a better tennis player this year than he was a year ago. He proved how wide the gap was between the Tilden and Johnston of other years and our younger stars of today in the Van Ryn match. Van Ryn isn't our best young tennis player, but he is first-class, and yet he was no sort of a match for the veteran.

Past and Present History

When Bobby Jones and James Braid tackled Harry Vardon and Ted Ray there was almost a forty-year link in championship golf. These four men had won twenty-three national championships and the only pity is that J. H. Taylor could not be included. Vardon and Braid were winning championships before Jones was born.

Most arguments of golf greatness center around Vardon and Jones. Vardon was king of the past—Jones king of the present and at least a section of the future. There are many who rate Vardon as the greatest of all golfers from the tee up to the green. But when the comparison is extended on to the bottom of the cup Jones comes far forward, taking the lead as a scoring machine since putting is a big part of scoring golf. Not even the great Vardon ever had any such eight years as Jones has known from 1922 to 1930, and this has been against a greater bulk of hard competition than the old-timers knew when golf was limited in popular scope.

Cochrane didn't care to compare the speed of Johnson and Grove. "I only saw Johnson in 1925," he says, "and he had been around eighteen years at that time. So I couldn't have seen him at his best. I can say that the Johnson of 1925 was not as fast as the Grove of today. This big left-hander can turn a baseball into a buckshot when he decides to crowd one through and put on the smoke."

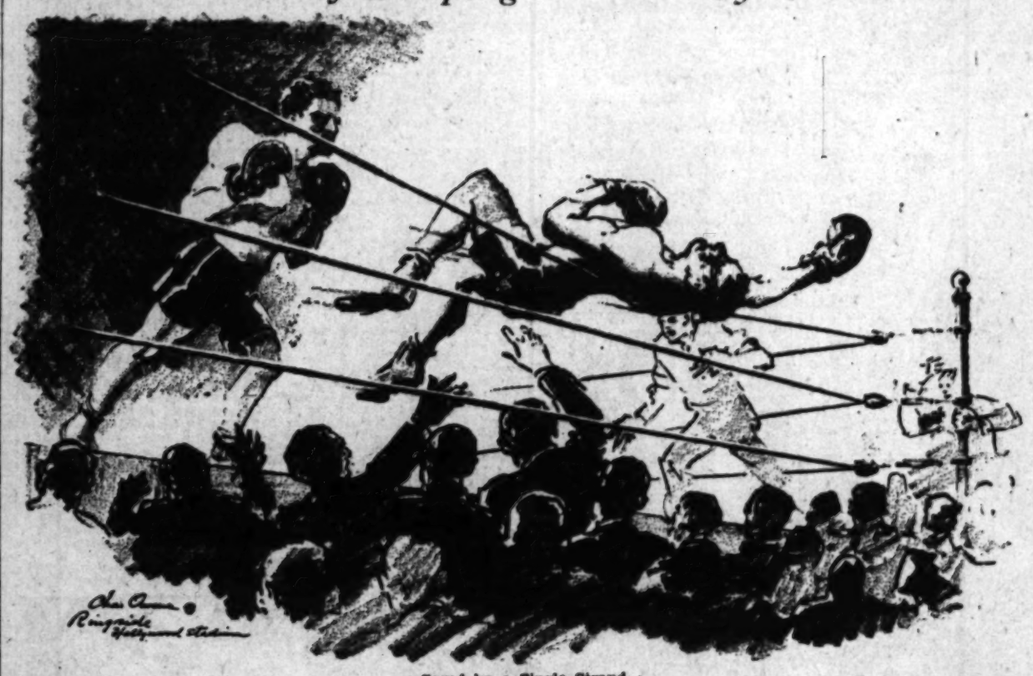
An Artistic Bit of Draping - - By Charles Owens



Saved by a Single Strand

Staff Artist Owens' conception of dramatic moment in tenth round of bout between Benny Miller and Babe Anderson at Hollywood Friday night. Miller's right-hand punch almost put Anderson into the audience and as he hung there suspended Owens got his bird's-eye view of the situation.

BENNY MILLER MAKES HIT

Hard-Hitting Young Welterweight Gives Artistic Ring Performance and Becomes "Hot" Copy

BY BRAVEN DYER

As long as Benny Miller continues to give high-class ring performances such as that exhibited at the Hollywood Legion Friday night local fans can rest assured of their money's worth in excitement.

Youthful Benny, traveling as he is right now, promises to put some much-needed life into the fight game and pretty definitely take the place of Ace Hudkins as one top-notch drawing card whose deadly dukes have already drubbed an imposing string of opponents.

BENNY MILLER

In beating "Babe" Anderson at Hollywood, young Miller turned in by far the most artistic and at the same time, convincing victory he has registered before local fans. Anderson is nobody's palooka. In fact, he had Young Corbett of Fresno on the floor a few months ago and that's not being done very often. Anderson trimmed Oakland Jimmy Duffy a year ago when Duffy was a lot tougher than he is now. One look at Babe in action and your experienced fight fan immediately knew that Anderson was far from a push-over.

WON 'EM ALL

But Benny went out and took ten straight rounds from the hard-hitting San Jose Battler. That's not my opinion alone, but is substantiated by Abe Roth, but is subers, who opined that Anderson could have been given a draw in the fourth.

Benny knocked Anderson down three times. Once in the first round with a terrific right-hand punch, but the Babe bounded up almost immediately, groggy and glassy-eyed, but fighting mad. Again in the third, Miller uncoiled his deadly right hand and Anderson went into a nose dive, this time for the count of nine.

But the prettiest piece of work of the entire evening was saved for the final round when both boys went at it with everything they had in reserve. Midway in the stanza Benny caught his foe flush on the chin with a terrific right. Anderson's feet sailed out from under him and the force of the blow drove the Babe into a horizontal position on the top strand of the ropes, his head and shoulders being out of the ring.

For perhaps five seconds the Babe was suspended there, knocked horizontal, but resting on the ropes with feet in the ring and head out, as Staff Artist Charles Owens has so ably pictured it all.

Then came the rebound, with Anderson sailing off the ropes only to be met by another terrific punch, deep to the solar plexus. This time the Babe went to the canvas for another nine count, but managed to weather the round, thanks to a fighting heart and much experience.

The most pleasing feature of Benny's work was his timing, as was demonstrated when he caught Anderson on the rebound from the ropes. The two blows were only seconds apart, but each was loaded with TNT.

SMART FIGHT

Benny fought a smart fight and a great one. Now and then there were some boos when the boys clinched and many of the calls were undoubtedly aimed at Miller, which shows that you can always tell a fight fan but you can't tell him much. What little clinching Benny did was done smartly.

Fans who booed Benny last night ought to go to New York or Philadelphia where they would be given frequent opportunities to exercise their tonsils to the utmost, what with such affairs as the heavyweights have been putting on.

Benny's next bout will be at the Olympic on July 15, next, against Joe Dundee, former welterweight champ. If you haven't seen the youngster, it's time to give him the once over.

GOLF TOURNEY AT DEL MONTE

HONOLULU GOAL OF YACHTSMEN

Four Southern California Racing Boats Take Off July Fourth in Seventh Running of Ocean Classic; New Record May Be Established

BY FRANK ROCHE

Honolulu straight ahead—that's the goal of four trim yachts, representing the cream of Southern California's white - winged race horses of the sea, which sail from outside the Los Angeles Harbor breakwater, July Fourth commemorating the seventh ocean classic to the Hawaiian islands. The four boats that will hoist canvas in this race, one of the finest tests of sailing in yachting, are as follows:

DR. ALBERT SOILAND.

Morgan Adams' schooner—Enchantress.

Lazard Lippman's cutter—Talayha.

Walter Horne's yawl—Contender.

Dr. Floyd Swift's schooner—Mollilou.

MATCH SAILS

These four sailing vessels will match the best in their sails and men against the elements and each other in the long run to the famous island in the center of the Pacific Ocean. Since 1906 Southern California yachtsmen have been staging this race to Honolulu and it is now one of the leading yachting events of the nation.

The last race was staged in 1928 and was won by Clem Stose's yawl Teva of the San Diego Yacht Club. The first race was captured by H. H. Sinclair's Lurline. The fastest actual time ever made to the islands was made by the Mariner in 1923. She was then the property of L. N. Norris, but is now John Barrymore's craft. The time was 11 days 14 hours 46 minutes. This mark may be beaten by the boats racing this year as at least two of them are rated as the fastest things in their class on the Coast.

The Trans-Pacific Yacht Club, under whose auspices the race is staged, had many obstacles in its path this year in planning the event. At first it was thought that the race might have to be postponed because of unsettled conditions which forced the calling off of the Tahiti event, but Dr. Admiral Soiland and his committee went right ahead on their project and stirred up entries enough to start the ball rolling.

The first boat to get in the race was Morgan Adams's Enchantress. Then the Talayha and the Contender entered and Dr. Floyd Swift, a Santa Barbara sportsman, came through with his entry in the Mollilou and the race was on. H. W. Rohl also entered his sloop Pandora, but recently withdrew because of the fact that he wanted to be present at the International Cup races on the Atlantic Coast next month. Clem Stose and his Teva were ready to enter, but Stose wants the race staged under the universal rule as it was last time out. The committee would not agree to this and Stose has held out to date.

The race this time will be staged under modified Seawanaka rules.

LACEY MAY ENTER

There is a possibility that W. G. Lacey will enter the race at the last minute with his Bonnie Doon. This sixty-seven-foot boat was formerly the Uncsa. She is a famous craft having been designed by A. Cary Smith, who was one of the best known in his line thirty years ago. Lacey has the boat all ready and all that would be necessary now would be to put provisions aboard for the trip.

The winning boats in the past were:

Craft and owner:
1906—Lurline, H. H. Sinclair.
1908—Lurline, H. H. Sinclair.
1910—Hawaii, Hawaiian Syndicate.
1912—Lurline, H. H. Sinclair.
1923—Diablo, A. R. Pedder.
1927—Invader, Don Lee.
1928—Teva, Clem Stose.

Among the well-known Southland yachtsmen who will go along besides the skippers and their regular crews are: Dr. Soiland, who will sail with Walter Horne on the Contender; Dan Lauberscheimer and Elias Taylor. Admiral Soiland made the voyage in 1923 in his own boat, the Viking IV, the last time he sailed.

Crabbe Picked to Win Event

Unless a faster man shows up at the one-mile rough water swim at the Santa Monica Breakwater Club today at 2 o'clock, Buster Crabbe is counted on to win the event. The L.A.A.C. swimmer is expected to have strong competition from Herb Bartels and Norman Kitterling.

One of the four swimming Skeete brothers from the Deauville Club may take a place in the event. The four brothers are Harold Skeete, Roland Skeete, Ray Skeete and Norman Skeete.

Bob Weaver will be referee for the swim, Frank Holborow, starter, and the judges are Aileen Allen, Arthur Allen, A.A.U., George Watkins, and timers, Harry M. Sugarman, Arthur Delmore and Edward C. Saunders.

The course of the swim is laid out at a slightly northern angle to a point a half-mile out from the beach at the Santa Monica Breakers Club beach. The swimmers will start on the waterline, run until waist deep, dive and swim the breakers, out around Walter Armstrong's yacht Edna, and back to the beach.

A fleet of ten dories will follow the swimmers from the surf to the marker boat and return.

CHICAGO GIRLS SET TWO WORLD RECORDS

CHICAGO, June 28. (AP)—Chicago's two Olympic girl stars, Betty Robinson and Helen Filkey, bettered two women's world track records today in the central amateur athletic union meet.

Miss Robinson clipped four-tenths of a second off the record in the 100-yard dash, sprinting the distance in eleven seconds. Miss Filkey bettered her own world mark by one-fifth of a second in the 80-meter hurdles, making it in 12 2-5s.

WESTWARD LEADS BOATS IN SAN CLEMENTE RACE

Syl Spaulding's sixty-eight-foot sloop Westward promised to finish off San Pedro Light this afternoon (Sunday,) the winner of the seventh annual 137-mile yacht race around San Clemente Island, in which thirteen boats started yesterday noon. Matt Walsh put his pea-green sloop Thorobred over to a perfect start, followed closely by H. W. Rohl's sloop Pandora, Westward and then Skip Warren's black ketch Ah-Meek.

After the fleet rounded Breakwater Light and hauled up on the wind Westward quickly walked into the lead and an hour later was so far ahead of her competitors that she seemed to have the race in her pocket. The race started in a very light westerly breeze with no sea, the breeze increasing steadily as the yachts beat up channel.

In the racing class, Westward was followed closely by Pandora, Thorobred and Babe, last year's winner; while Don Douglas's new seventy-five-foot staysail schooner Endymion was leading the cruisers, trailed by Hugh Angleman's schooner Ocean Waif and W. W. Peddar's schooner Diablo, thrice winner of the San Clemente event. The weather was too soft at the start for the big boats. Morgan Adams's 136-foot schooner Enchantress was well up with the fleet, but Walter Horne's 110-foot yawl Contender, which got a poor start, was far astern.

Baseball Notes

In capturing six out of seven games played with Portland last week, Oakland pitchers displayed rare form, holding the Ducks to a .233 batting average. Portland scored only thirteen runs during the week, not even one home run was made by the Portland nine in the seven games.

Outfielder Steinbacher has compiled a batting mark of .429 in the fourteen games he has played with Sacramento. Eldred has hit for a .370 mark in the sixteen games in which he has participated since joining the league leaders.

Sacramento holds the leadership in the Coast League although five teams in the circuit have made more safe hits than the Senators. The Senators are fifth in runs scored.

Jesse Hill has batted at a .395 clip in the twenty games played since joining the Hollywood Stars. Parker has batted .421 for the Stars in twenty games.

Great pitching on the part of Sacramento hurlers accounts for the team's position at the top of the Coast League standings. In eleven weeks the Senators have held their opponents to 240 runs, while scoring 412 times.

San Francisco, fourth place club in the Coast League, has scored more runs than any other team in the circuit. The Seals have tallied 508 times, averaging more than six runs per game.

The Sacramento and Oakland ball clubs both rapped out forty-three home runs in the first eleven weeks of play. Portland and Seattle clubs each had forty-five stolen bases.

SMOKY CITY TO PUT ON EVENT

Dates of Meet Announced as August 2, 3 and 5

Every Star of Country to Display Wares

Champions Billed to Defend Their Crowns

BY FRED TURBYVILLE

PITTSBURGH, June 28.—Pittsburgh is all "smoked up" over the national A.A.U. championships to be run off in Pitt Stadium in August. Last year's all-star cast at Denver will be considerably augmented by youths who have been little short of sensations in college meets this spring. In short, about everybody who is anybody in track and field will be present in Pitt Stadium August 2, 3 and 5.

FRANK WYKOFF

In this respect the 1930 meet may eclipse the 1929 meet, but in the matter of attendance it is doubtful if any city of the East will surpass the Denver turnout.

EXPECTS STARS

"We'll get nearly every star of track and field in this meet," says John T. Taylor, secretary of the Allegheny Mountain Association, the host for this year.

"Pittsburgh is perfectly located to draw athletes from all over the United States. It is what we call the center of athletic population. That means the great bulk of competitors can come to Pittsburgh with the least amount of travel. Certainly it is far for the boys of the Pacific Coast, but it will make it easy on the other side for all the athletes of the East and the Middle West.

"We're expecting the greatest turnout of athletes in the history of the games. The easy location is not the only reason for our hopes, the fact that the Olympics in Los Angeles are only two years away is spurring the athletes on. By 1932 this country should have its finest Olympic squad of all time."

Practically every winner at Denver last year will be at Pittsburgh, as well as the boys who placed.

These champions of 1929 probably are as good as ever, but there are probably some boys who are even better and who didn't figure in the 1929 games.

SIMPSON TO RUN

George Simpson was not in the Denver events and Frank Wykoff had not developed to his present great form. These men likely will be favored over Ed Tolan in the 100 and 220.

Chapman of Bates is favored by track men over Edwards of New York University in the half-mile.

And in the mile Sivic of Butler University is the pick to win. Last year it was Leo Lermond of Boston.

Rockaway is an early choice in the 220-yard low hurdles over Steve Anderson, who won both high and low events last year.

In the pole vault Warne of Northwestern appears to have something on Sturdy of Los Angeles, last year's winner

Connor of Yale is favored in the sixteen-pound hammer event. Last year's winner was Merchant of San Francisco.

Those who are expected to repeat are Pete Bowen of Pittsburgh in the quarter, Anderson in the high hurdles, Lassalette in the high jump, Brix in the shot, Krenz in the discus, Mortensen in the javelin and McDonald in the fifty-six-pound weight.

In the broad jump there isn't much choice between Ed Hamm of Georgia Tech, Olympic champion, and Gordon of Iowa, national collegiate champion and A.A.U. winner last year.

The sprint field will see all the leaders of the year—Wykoff, Tolan, Simpson, Bracey, Leland and the rest.

Along with Anderson and Rockaway in the hurdles also will be found Lee Sentman, University of Illinois star.

Nelson of Butler, national junior champion, will give Lassalette and Parker Shelby of Oklahoma some competition.

GOOD MILERS

The mile will bring out a good field. Sivic of Butler, Martin of Purgue, Conger of the Illinois Athletic Club, Lermond of Boston and several others should make this event a real feature.

Krenz and Rothert, Stanford weight men, are two of the outstanding field stars. Krenz is favorite to win the discus and Rothert should give Brix an argument in the shot put.

Outside of Pat McDonald, the venerable policeman from New York, the whole field is youthful and every man competing at Pittsburgh, even McDonald, should be at top form the year of the Olympics.

The Allegheny Mountain Association is working hard to make this year's meet a great success like Denver's, but prospects are not good for a record turnout of fans. Public interest in track and field is not as good in the East as in the West.

SEVENTY-NINE DAYS

"SEVENTY-NINE days to wait."

"Wait for what?"

"The football season, stupid!"

Being a brief report of a conversation between Col. George Barton of Undersheriff Frank Dewar's office and one of his aides.

Once a gridiron hero in the days of Rugby at the University of Southern California Col. Barton takes his football seriously.

He counts the days between seasons, and if readers of this column are ever at a loss for an accurate check on the matter a ring at the Undersheriff's office will bring the desired information.

The case of Col. Barton is typical of a situation existing in our midst.

There is more interest over whether the City Council is finally going to kick through with the $225,000 necessary to enlarge the Coliseum to 100,000 seating capacity than there is in the election of a new Governor.

Some of the boys and girls are already writing in for past season scores, fortifying themselves for arguments that will last all fall.

Last week one gent was after Washington's scores with S.C., Stanford and California.

"Remember 'em?

The Trojans licked Washington 48 to 0, Stanford won 6 to 0 and California 7 to 0.

THE BARRY WOOD CASE

PLEASANT news of the increasing athletic success of Barry Wood, local boy who was a Harvard sophomore this year, comes from Yale sources.

It seems that young Wood not only managed to star for dear old Harvard on the football field, as was well chronicled last fall, but that in baseball, hockey and tennis he has reaped other laurels.

In the hockey series with Yale, for example, he saved the day by scoring the tying goal in the last minute of play, thereby enabling a team-mate to put over the winning marker in the extra session.

Young Mr. Wood has grown in proportions, and he is reported now to weigh 190 pounds and tower 6ft. 2in.

He is a shining example of the real student athlete. He takes a stiff premedical course at Harvard and gets nothing worse than I's and 2's.

And this summer he's putting in a little time at college on his studies so he will be ready for a strenuous football season in the fall.

HARRY POLLOK ERUPTS

HARRY POLLOK, exploitation expert from below the border, dropped into the bustling metropolis last week with news designed to thrill the lovers of hoss races.

Seems that Agua Caliente is starting a summer race meeting on July 4—a new departure—and Mr. Pollok is quite enthusiastic about the matter.

"It appears like we will have over 600 horses at the track, and they aren't all bums either as some of those who deride a summer meeting would have it appear," says Mr. Pollok.

"We'll have some really good horses like Ervast, Ironsides, Dr. Wilson, Seth's Hope, Nusakan, Good and Hot, Scimitar, and don't forget Up, the 2-year-old Jim Crofton paid $15,000 for.

"We'll run through July and August, and I wouldn't be a bit surprised if we set new attendance records at the track. Tourists are dropping in all the time, and the crowds at the hotel have been unusual with no particular sports attraction as a magnet."

Mr. Pollok also dropped a hint of a probable two-day medal play golf tourney for the ladies after the national amateur championship.

This would be quite an attraction, designed to bring together such stars as Glenna Collett, Helen Hicks and others of the eastern galaxy in competition with such local favorites as Leona Pressler, Mrs. Gregg Lifur and others.

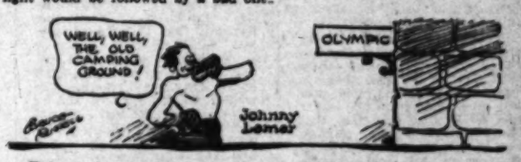
THE LAMAR RECORD

A SIMON-PURE product of the old four-round days, Johnny Lamar moves into the Olympic this week in a ten-round battle with Goldie Hess, the Ocean Park pride.

It's been a long time between shots for Lamar at the Olympic. Until recent months he was never able to strike a consistent stride. A good fight would be followed by a bad one.



But now he seems to have gauged his capabilities, and his fights at Hollywood have bordered on the sensational.

It's five years since Johnny fought at the Olympic, but he did not, as I have seen chronicled, open the Grand-avenue arena in 1925.

The main event that night was between two lightweights who long ago retired—ancient Phil Salvador and Julius Jessick.

Lamar first climbed between Olympic ropes when he fought Jackie Fields a six-round draw under the Tommy O'Brien-Tommy Cello bout August 12, 1925. It was the second Olympic card under the Danziger-Root regime.

THE STRANGLER TOURS

OLD Strangler Lewis leaves these shores tonight for far-off Australia.

It's a six months' tour that intrigues the Strangler, a combined trip of work and pleasure. Mrs. Lewis goes with him.

The Strangler is one of the biggest money-makers that ever performed on the mat, and since the development of the airplane for transportation purposes, he has exceeded all records for number of matches.

He estimates, for example, that in the past year—thanks to the airplane—he has wrestled an average of twice a week, approximately 150 matches.

His average purse per match is probably $2000—$300,000 a year.

He stacks that against fighters' incomes with no apologies, stressing the fact that wrestling is constructive physically, fighting destructive.

The Strangler is a thrifty soul, and parks his money where it will bring in more. Recently he opened a steak house at Glendale, and the success of that one has inspired the second of a string at Alhambra.

ANNOUNCE DATES FOR ANNUAL STATE JUNIOR GOLF TOURNEY

DEL MONTE, June 28.—Entries close July 16 for the California State junior golf championship July 16-20. This important event will be played on the Del Monte course and is open to boys who have not reached their 18th birthday and whose parents are a member of a club which belongs to the California Association. Entries stating age, name of club and handicap should be forwarded to the tournament committee at Hotel Del Monte, Del Monte, California.

The annual father and son tournament will precede the junior championship. Father-and-son teams can play this eighteen-hole medal play event any day from July 12 to 16.

McGraw Predicts Giants Will Beat Out Cubs and Robins in National League Race

VETERAN PILOT AFTER PENNANT

Muggsy Out to Show Critics He is Still Leader

Jawn Doesn't Consider Cubs as Real Contenders

Claims Hot Weather to Hurt Brooklyn Twirlers

BY JOHN P. GALLAGHER
"Times" Staff Correspondent

CHICAGO, June 28. (Exclusive)—Muggsy McGraw, confident that his troubles are over now, announces to the world that he has his heart set on winning the 1930 National League championship.

"We have a great team that ought to make a strong fight for the championship this year if misfortunes do not intervene," McGraw said today in St. Louis, where he is playing a series with the slipping Cardinals.

"After our opening splurge of seven straight wins we ran into our share of hard luck and uncovered weaknesses which had to be remedied. Today I feel pretty well satisfied with the club. We are hitting the ball hard and we can match our batting strength against any club in the circuit."

OUT TO SHOW CRITICS

Incidentally, so can the Brooklyn Robins, and the Chicago Cubs' leader is of the same opinion. But, however that may be, McGraw really wants to win this year's pennant more than the fans realize. Particularly does he resent insinuations that the "old man" isn't there any more and that the parade has passed him. Muggsy feels quite confident that he has the same driving force that first characterized his work when he went to New York over a quarter of a century ago.

Jawn J. never has gone more than five years without a pennant in his career as a baseball manager. His longest gap was between 1905 and 1911. He now has gone five years without winning a pennant, his last flag being won in 1924, when it was the fourth of a chain running through 1921, 1922, 1923 and 1924.

McGraw doesn't hold the Chicago Cubs, last year's National League champions, in high regard. He says they have been shot to pieces by the loss of Hornsby, and they have not been able to replace Hal Carlson, whose death, Muggsy avers, was a terrific blow to the Chicago club. And of the Brooklyn Robins, McGraw thinks they have several hard hitters, but he believes the hot weather will seriously affect some of their pitchers, notably Elliott, Vance, Luque and Clark, and that, therefore, the club will not stand up as a real contender.

The Giants are due in Chicago for a four-game series on Monday, and it is very likely that after the games are over Mac will have a different view of William Wrigley's Bruins. Joe McCarthy's pitchers, Root, Malone and Bush, seem to have found themselves and his sluggers, Hornsby or no Hornsby, are now pounding the ball as viciously as they did last year.

LEACH IN BETTER SHAPE

Jackson, says McGraw, is still below par in fielding and hitting because he has not yet recovered from the effects of the mumps, a disease that saps the strength of the best conditioned athletes. Leach, says the veteran manager, is in better health this year than last season and is a far better ball player.

"As soon as Jackson is right," said McGraw, "I think we will no longer remain out of first place. The race has really narrowed down to a battle with the Robins and the Cubs, and I have confidence that we will be able, barring accidents of course, to carry off the flag."

McGraw really has a good, snappy team, as far as the National League teams go these days, but he has just about as worrisome a pitching problem as any other manager in the league, and while it may be true that the Brooklyn Robins' pitchers may wilt a bit under the torrid weather of July and August, McGraw has no assurance that his own mound staff will hold together during that time, in which case he would get no more than an even break with his rivals across the East River.

Then, despite McGraw's assertion that the race has narrowed down to a fight between three clubs, the Pittsburgh Pirates may take on a new lease of life when it gets its cripples back into the line, which will surprise not only McGraw but the Cubs and Robins as well.

OCEAN PARK BARGE HOST TO SHRINERS

Being groomed for one of the largest week-end parties to ever visit a stationary pleasure craft, the Star of Scotland fishing barge riding at anchor off the Lick Pier at Ocean Park is making provisions to handle an extraordinary outpouring of visitors over the week-end. The Temple Guard Patrol of the Al Malaikah Shriners, coupled with a big party of several hundred employees of the May Company, along with regular visitors, will set a record in attendance on this fishing ship.

Additions to the live bait equipment and the flood of lights for night fishing are being completed to handle the big crowd scheduled with the shore boat Scotty being groomed for the occasion.

BROOKLYN'S BABY ELEPHANT - By Feg Murray

"ALEX" TELLS OF EVENTFUL LIFE

Veteran Pitcher Relates Tales of Major League Career; Small Size Handicapped Bill Killefer in Landing Regular Job With Philadelphia

BY GROVER C. ALEXANDER
No. 2 (Continued from last Sunday's "Times")

(Copyright, 1930, by North American Newspaper Alliance.)

Early in the season of 1912, when I was with the Phillies our manager, Charlie Dooiin, broke his leg, and Pat Moran hurt his arm, both in one series in St. Louis, so the Phillies were up against it for catchers. They brought in catchers from every part of the country, semi-pros, minor leaguers and anything they could lay their hands on. Some of them were terrible.

Finally they brought in a young fellow named Bill Killefer, from the Buffalo club. Well, they took a look at him and almost decided not to let him even sit on the bench. Catchers then were usually big, strapping fellows of the type of Roger Bresnahan, and Killefer weighed less than 150. They did let him have a little corner of the bench at last.

The other catchers weren't so much. I remember one named Spencer who was working against New York one day. At that time the Giants had Merkle, Doyle and five or six others who would steal second just as sure as they got on base. They were running like wildfire on this Spencer, and he was throwing the ball high almost every time, into center field.

"I'll get the next one low," he said to me, after several innings, gritting his teeth.

So when the next man set out to steal Spencer threw, and hit me right in the ankle. It was the only time I was ever knocked off the rubber in a literal sense.

"I got that one down, didn't I?" Spencer asked.

"You bet you did," I said.

Finally they had to let Killefer try his hand. And when they let him get in there they never could get him out.

Bill Killefer was the greatest catcher I ever worked with or ever saw any other pitcher work with. I saw King and Archer only a few times, and I don't want to discredit them. All I know is that of all the catchers I ever saw enough to know much about, Killefer was the best. Killefer has since managed the Chicago Cubs and now manages the St. Louis Browns.

Catchers had a lot to do then that they don't have to do now. When a man got on first it was a nine to one shot the next one would try to bunt him down. And if he failed to do that, it was sure the runner would try to steal.

When a man gets on first now along comes Ruth or Simmons or Hornsby or Klein and knocks the ball over the fence, so the catcher doesn't have to worry about runners stealing. But in those days he had to work the pitcher and watch for moves by the runners, for the runners were always getting ready to pull something. A catcher had to be able to throw and he had to field his position and to know how to get out for bunts; in fact, he ran the whole team. Everything was in front of him, and he was boss on the field.

As I look back on that team it seems far away, but I remember them all well. Out in right field was "Silent John" Titus. He said "hello" in the spring, and "good-by" in the fall. I really don't believe he ever said anything else. And he always had a toothpick in his mouth.

The club had to write to Titus one summer and ask him to cash his checks so they could balance their books. He would carry them around in his pocket for months after receiving his pay.

Dode Paskert was in center field. He wasn't a great hitter, but he could go and get that ball. He was an outfielder very much like Taylor Douthit of the St. Louis Cardinals, but not as good a hitter.

Sherry Magee was in left field, and he was one of the best hitters who ever lived. He led the league one year with an average of about .336; it seems to me there must be nearly 100 players who hit that much or more now. Sherry wasn't a great thrower, but how he could hit!

For pitchers we had Chalmers, Humphries, Earl Moore, Ad Brennan and later, Demaree, Erskine Mayer and Bill Burns, a left-hander. In those days, when you went into a city for a series, you faced a great pitcher every day. The Phillies, for instance, might give you Moore, Chalmers, Humphries and Rixey, one right after the other. Now when you play a club you face one star, perhaps, and the rest are just mediocre pitchers.

Eppa Rixey joined the Phils in 1912, right out of the University of Virginia, and maybe you think he didn't have fun. The players kidded him unmercifully, and they had some great times with him. They would get a bunch together with combs and paper and hum "Marching Through Georgia," and Rixey would go nearly crazy. The Giants used to get his goat by whistling it on the bench when he pitched.

Not long after Rixey joined us, when we were out in Cincinnati, he had a camera, and suggested to a few of the fellows that they stand in front of the hotel so he could take a picture of them. One of the players whispered to another to keep eppa standing there for a few minutes.

So the players shifted this way and that, delaying the taking of the picture until the fellow who had whispered had time to get upstairs about four stories. Suddenly the window of an upstairs room went up and a whole laundry bag full of water landed right on Rixey's head. I can see that straw hat down around his neck now.

If I had told the name of the player who pulled that trick then it would have meant a fight. But now I guess it can be told: It was Sherry Magee.

Rixey had a great fast ball when he joined us. He didn't have much idea of what pitching was all about, but it took him a mighty short time to learn.

They were all great fellows, and regardless of how much baseball they could play gave you everything they had for nine full innings. There was never any loafing on the job with them. As long as they were on the field they hustled.

One day over in Brooklyn, not long after I had joined the club, I pitched the first game of a double-header and won it, in ten innings. Then I went on and pitched the second game, and won that, too. That night I got notice from the club that my salary had been raised.

But we finished down near the bottom those years of 1912, 1913 and 1914, not even making the first division at any time. We were just playing out the schedule, and never had much idea of getting anywhere. And it didn't occur to any of us that a pennant was coming to us soon.

(Next, Alexander in his first World Series.)

AT THE end of 1926, the Brooklyn Dodgers recalled a left-handed pitcher, "Big Jim" Elliott, from the Seattle club of the Pacific Coast League, where he had made a sensational record. Previously they had got the ambling man mountain from Terre Haute, where he had done a swell job of pitching in the Three-Eye League, carrying the Tots through to their first pennant in twenty years. Now he is a member in good standing of Brooklyn's five-star pitching staff—Vance, Luque, Clark, Phelps and himself—an important cog in the wheels of this "team of destiny" that seems to be rolling along to a pennant without any good reason to be doing any such thing.

But in the meantime Elliott has had his ups and downs. One of the biggest men in baseball, his huge frame is often afflicted with aches and pains in proportion to its size. Back in 1924, when he reported to the San Antonio club, he was so weakened by the hot weather that he had to be sent back to Terre Haute. Last year his mammoth tummy was beset with trouble and he withered away to a mere 215 pounds. He was able to take part in only six games for dear old Uncle Robbie in 1929, winning one and losing two. So you can easily see that his return to form this season has brought joy to many a home in Flatbush.

Of course, it is true that the rejuvenation of that wonderful shortstop, Glenn Wright, has been the spark which has inspired the Dodgers to go along at top speed, but it must be admitted, too, that the good work being done by this 235-pound southpaw is having a lot to do with the city across the bridge becoming pennant-conscious again.

LES KENNEDY, SPIKER MEET AT WILMINGTON

Long Beach's heavyweight hope, Les Kennedy, gets back into harness Wednesday night at Wilmington, when he squares off against Ray Spiker, the ex-marine whom Frankie Campbell refused to meet several months ago at the Olympic arena. Kennedy and Spiker clash over the ten-round distance.

The Spiker bouts will be the first of a busy campaign for Kennedy, which he hopes will lead to a return encounter with Campbell or a scrap with Max Baer.

Bud Baker faces Battling Max Hernandez in the six-round semi-final. They are light-heavies. Another pair of light-heavyweights, Jack Iman and Jimmy Peterson, mix in a six-rounder. Two fours, Elliott Badilla vs. Urban Hernandez and Chick Peralto vs. Jumping-Jack Bobo, complete the card.

SPRINTERS GO AFTER DASH RECORD TUESDAY

VANCOUVER (B. C.) June 28. (AP) Another onslaught on the world's 100-yard dash record will be waged here next Tuesday, in the feature event of the Dominion Day track-and-field meet.

Percy Williams, Vancouver, king of the Olympic sprinters; George Simpson, the "Buckeye Bullet" from Ohio State; Eddie Tolan, Michigan Negro and official holder of the world's 100-yard dash mark of 9.5s, and Russell Sweet, San Francisco Olympic Club, are four of the dash men who will vie for honors in the century.

Frank Wykoff, who ran the century in 9.4s. in Chicago this month, turned down an invitation to again compete against Williams.

QUINTERRO WINS BOUT

DENVER (Colo.) June 28. (AP)—Emmanuel Quinterro, Florida welterweight, won a ten-round decision over Romero Lemon of San Francisco here last night. Ham Jenkins, Denver Negro, won a decision over Jimmy Rivers, California welterweight, in ten rounds.

BORDER TRACK OPENS FRIDAY

Independence Handicap First on Turf Program

Classy Field Expected When Barrier is Released

Fifty-two Days of Racing for Summer Fans

AGUA CALIENTE (Baja California, Mex.) June 28.—The Independence handicap is to be the opening feature event of the three-day "Blaze of glory" that will usher in the first summer season of racing at the Agua Caliente Jockey Club, starting July Fourth and running fifty-two days through Labor Day. It will be a six-furlong dash for all ages and promises to draw the same sort of classy field as those that graced the winter stakes. The list of starters will probably be drawn from the following, each and every one of which is in tip-top racing condition. The owners and racers:

Baron Long, Ervast; C. B. Irwin, Ironsides, Mole Hill and Musakan; Bert Seburn, Pookanaka; William Finnegan, Dr. Wilson; Agua Caliente Stable, Beth Hogan; George O'Connell, Starference; James Parsons, Seth Rose and Lady Seth; Bill Bee Stable, Edisto; L. T. Whitehill, Shasta Fear; Meadowbrook Farm, Good and Hot; La-Brae Stable, Sweeping Away; Midnight Follies Stable, Dapper.

Following the feature races of the first three days there are nine stakes events to be decided during the meeting and will all be run on Sundays. They are as follows: Coronado Claiming Stakes, July 13, one mile; Zaragosa Claiming Stakes, July 20, six furlongs; Caliente Claiming Stakes, July 27, one mile and a sixteenth; Fleetfoot Handicap, August 3, six furlongs; Juvenile Handicap, August 10, five and a half furlongs; Midsummer Derby, August 17, one mile and a sixteenth; President's Plate, August 24, one mile and a furlong; Owners' Handicap, August 31, six furlongs and the Labor Day Handicap, September 1, one mile and a quarter.

The Presidents' Plate has an added money value of $5000 and carries with it, also, a silver trophy, presented by Wirt G. Bowman, the president of the Jockey Club.

There are 400 horses now quartered at the track and General Manager James N. Crofton says enough more are booked from the East, Middle West and Canada to swell the total to over 700.

There will be ten races each day the first three days of the meeting, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, July 4, 5 and 6.

FORT MacARTHUR NINE TIPS SARATOGA TEAM

Behind the splendid pitching of La Fiore the Fort MacArthur baseball team defeated the U.S.S. Saratoga nine yesterday by a 7-to-2 score. La Fiore held the sailors under control almost at all times. He turned them back in the sixth inning on four pitched balls. Ford of the soldier team hit a home run, the only circuit clout of the game. Score:

BOBBY JONES DISPLAYS COURAGE TO COP CROWN

BY SOL METZGER

Golf demands none of that rare physical courage, a quality that among gladiators packed the ancient amphitheaters of Rome. Still it carries a thrill that is almost unequaled in other sports. And it does demand of its champions a control of nerves that few are able to give. It is the sublimeness of Jones's nerve control that makes him the outstanding player of the world.

I doubt if any winner ever waded through a stronger field to take an amateur title than Bobby overcame at St. Andrews to gain his longest sought-for goal, the British amateur. It took sub-par golf to down his first opponent.

Then came Cyril J. H. Tolley, British title-holder, a lion for courage, a massive man physically, a proven contestant when the honors of his native land were in question. Tolley had won his spurs eleven years before at Muirfield when he downed Bob Gardner on the first extra hole of the finals by sinking a tickish downhill putt of thirty feet.

Tolley played magnificently. But for the breaks Bobby would likely have passed from the picture. Twice his shots, going astray, caromed from the domes of hardy Scots to fall clear of trouble. And on the last hole, the nineteenth, a stymie alone broke the back of the fighting Briton.

Through these strains Bobby had survived. He must have been sore put next afternoon when he faced the ranking American champion, Jimmy Johnston, a player noted for his magnificent rallies when down. A grim fighter is the St. Paul boy. Jimmy held close to Bobby on the first nine. But three of the next four holes were lost. Being 4 down and 5 to play is no soft sinecure.

Johnston can step on the gas when needed. He proceeded to now. He won back three of the lost holes by the time the seventeenth was played. Now the pressure was on Jones, the greatest pressure, so stars tell me, that a golfer may face. No other strain is greater. Bobby was to be put to the acid test.

The eighteenth is historic at St. Andrews for American rallies. On it in 1923 Ouimet bagged a magnificent birdie to halve Roger Wethered and save the Walker Cup for America. To it sped Johnston in two shots. Bobby's third stopped eight feet from the cup. Jimmy's approach putt all but fell in. If Jones could not hole his eight-footer it is doubted today if he could have held on against the rally of Johnston.

Bobby calmly stroked it in, apparently as if on a practice green, for a half that meant victory. An eight-footer is not so much with stars. But when the holing of it means that the ambition of a lifetime of golf is to be fulfilled or not, then it becomes a tremendous shot. In spite of all the greatness of the previous afternoon in his match with Tolley, in spite of all the strain he was now under, Bobby got it down. Afterwards he said that at the time it seemed the longest putt he had ever faced. I guess Jones has a rare sort of courage, the kind it will take a psychologist to describe. It isn't physical, to be sure. Just what it is, I don't know. But he has it more than any man who ever swung a brassie. That is certain.

STARS BUMP SACS AGAIN

jump on the Stars, but anything resembling good fielding would have pulled Hulvey out of the round without a run scoring.

In an effort to make it seven in a row, Vitt is going to send Gordon Rhodes and Jim Turner against the Sacs today. Tony Freitas and Louie Vinci are expected to hurl for the Solons.

Hollywood scored first in the second inning, Heath's single and Green's triple off the right-field screen producing a run.

SOLONS SCORE FOUR

The Senators came right back with four runs in the third to go in front. Hulvey would have escaped without a run scoring in this round but for some wobbly support from his mates. Keating's single down the left-field line started the fireworks. French also singled and McLaughlin sacrificed, although Hulvey could have forced Keating at third had Green remained on his base. Backer then lined to left and Hill, after getting in front of the drive, dropped the ball, Keating scoring. Eldred forced Backer at second and a double play should have resulted, but Brannan was slow getting the ball away. That put French on third, from where he counted on Hoag's hit to right. Osborn singled infield to bulge the bags and then Camilli smashed a hit to center that brought Eldred and Hoag pattering over the platter. Camilli, however, was caught when he tried to take second on the throw-in, Lee cutting of Carlyle's heave and tossing to Brannan for the third out.

The Stars got a cheap run in their half of the third when Hill walked, advanced to third on a couple of infield outs and scored when Keating uncorked a wild pitch.

Two more Sheiks crossed the plate in the fourth to tie the score, 4-all. With one away Heath drove one of Keating's offerings into the bleachers for the circuit. Severeid then doubled to left and Hulvey brought him in with the tying run by smashing a single over second.

Keating was given another raking over in the fifth when the Stars blasted across three more markers to sew up the struggle. The rally was featured by Barbee's homer into the bleachers after Brannan had doubled to center. Heath's single and steal of second and Severeid's one-base punch to left brought over the third run of the inning. Bryan replaced Keatinik after Severeid had his safety.

JOHNS TO RESCUE

When Camilli and Wirts led off with singles in the Sacramento sixth, Vitt grew nervous and sent in Johns. The Sheik southpaw fanned Bryan but walked French to fill the bases. McLaughlin and Backer, however, were both out on short flies and the threat was over.

Eldred homed over the left-field fence in the seventh for a fifth Sacramento run, while Backer's double and Hoag's single accounted for the final Solon score in the ninth. Score:

NIGHT BALL SPREADING

Nocturnal Games Proving Popular in Minors But Major Leagues Look Coldly on Idea

CHICAGO, June 28. (Exclusive)—Night baseball in the minors is growing, but it never will be played in the majors. That is the opinion of competent critics, who have watched the teams in action in the higher loops of minors. The game loses none of its thrill, but it is ridiculous to say that the ball can be seen as well as in the daytime.

Indianapolis is going strong for the game, and so is Sacramento. They will get bigger crowds than in the day, and after all that is what pays. It is possible that St. Louis Nationals will try to give the game under the Kleigs a chance, but the move is meeting with no applause on the part of the other club owners. The American League is not taking the night ball seriously.

Indianapolis played its first game at night before a big crowd, which was all excited about the game. It looked to the club owners as if they had hit upon a paying venture at last.

The game under the Kleigs is a thrill producer. The players seem to move faster, and the ball seems to be traveling livelier than the present rabbit, but it is in an atmosphere of unreality.

Some students seem to think that the lively ball will lose its speed at night, because of the heavy air. Players found that they did not get the distance to their hits as they do in the day. Out of a dark spot a player dashes to get the ball and the crowd likes the play, it seems by the applause.

Players have trouble seeing the ball, too. If it passes before one of the light beams, the fielder loses it.

BERGER, WILSON IN HOMER DUEL

Both Clouters Out to Make New League Record

Circuit Clout Mark Certain if Pace Continues

Former Angel is Sensation With Boston Braves

BY BOB RAY

Baseball fans all over the country and particularly in the National League are getting a thrill out of the home-run duel being waged by Hack Wilson, the squat center fielder of the Chicago Cubs, and Walter Berger, former Angel, who was the outstanding rookie of the majors with Bill McKechnie's Boston Braves.

When this was written they were tied for the leadership in circuit clouting of the National League with twenty-two apiece. If Hack and Berger, whom the Boston scribes have named "Biff," continue their present pace one or both of them is going to break the present home-run record for the National League.

Chuck Klein, the Philly flychaser, set the present National League homer mark last season when he smacked out forty-three circuit clouts. Klein's record better d the previous record of forty-two made by Rogers Hornsby several seasons back.

BOTH HAVE HIT 3

When we last checked up Wilson had made his twenty-two homers after the Cubs had played sixty-five games of their total 154 for the season. Berger's mark was even better for he had made his twenty-two circuit wallops when the Braves had played but fifty-eight games. And the Boston mark must be considered quite phenomenal considering that he was out of at least ten games because of injuries.

Hack and Biff certain possess the physical extremes in business of hitting homers. Wilson is little more than 5 feet 5 inches tall, but he tips the beam over 200 pounds. In fact Hack has a roly poly appearance. However, Wilson's weight is all in his torso and he has a great strength that enables him to rap the ball out of the lot with a slap over insulting inkiness.

On the other hand, Berger is of the ideal type of build. He is about 6 feet 2 inches tall, weighs a bit less than 200 pounds and is of the long, sinewy type. Biff gets his power at the plate from his big wrists, with which he snaps the bat instead of using the swinging style of swing that Babe Ruth has adopted.

Wilson has a host of friends over the National circuit, while Berger, because he has been with like to see a rookie make good, is gaining more and more friends every day.

TOUGH ON ANGEL HURLERS

This Berger-Wilson home-run duel is proving quite a popular thing to young Doyle Peterson, the Angel mascot. Hack Wilson used to be little Donie's favorite, but he was mostly because he was in the big leagues. Now that Berger has gone up to the big show and is giving Wilson a battle for honors, Donie doesn't know who to root for. It looks like the only way that Wilson and Berger can get to settle the Angel mascot's problem is for them to finish the season just as they are now—in a tie.

Johnny Lamar Defends Pacific Coast Lightweight Title Against Goldie Hess Tuesday

TWO GAMESTERS TANGLE IN OLYMPIC "NATURAL"

Mexican Boy and Beach Kid With Bass Drum Heart Collide; Payne Bouts Made Match Possible

BY KAY OWE

Johnny Lamar—sinewy Mexican—will defend his Pacific Coast lightweight championship Tuesday night against Goldie Hess—the kid with the bass-drum heart.

One great club fighter in any contest insures a battle but when both of them swing 'em it becomes a double decker. The weight is 135 pounds. Both boys have posted $500 weight and appearance forfeits.

It is a local natural besides the title significance. Lamar has been trying to force a fight with Golden Goldie for over a year. The Mexican accused Hess of ducking him.

JACK DOYLE

But that is one thing Hess hasn't done. He fought ten or eleven main events in the Olympic last year that put over $100,000 into the house. His opponents were the best boys in the country-wide round-up.

The list includes Santiago Zorilla, Tod Morgan, Eddie Mack, Gaston Charles, Cecil Payne, and others. Hess didn't always win, but his fights were so furiously sensational he fought rematches with Mack and Payne.

Lamar didn't get into the picture until he came across with a great win over Payne after Payne had twice whipped Goldie. The Mexican also defeated Hector McDonald.

LONG IN MAKING

Promoters tried to make the match two months ago, but Hess had a chance to fight Tony Canzoneri in Chicago and went away. The Canzoneri bout failed to materialize twice for Hess. Jack Dempsey was to stage the first one. Afterward Jim Mullen booked it.

The first Hess-Canzoneri bout went by the wayside when Jack (Kid) Berg split open Canzoneri's eye. Postponements due to weather blew up the Mullen attempt.

Hess, rested, fresh and eager for heavy duty, lost no time agreeing to take Lamar while the Mexican was hot. Lamar will outweigh Goldie, who is a junior lightweight yet and is at present bidding for a Benny Bass title bout.

The style of these two boys is 100 per cent for a great fight. It figures to rival the vicious battle when Ace Hudkins defeated Joe Benjamin at old Vernon for the Coast lightweight title in 1925.

HESS IS YOUNGER

Hess is 20 years of age, and Lamar is 26. From the angle of stamina there is little to choose. Lamar proved his metal when he had to come from behind after being floored by Teddy Palacios at Hollywood last week to win. He had Palacios on the floor for two nine counts in late rounds.

Sammy Jackson, Negro stablemate of Hess, who ranks with Benny Miller and Sandy Garrison Casanova as a welter prospect, boxes Charley Cobb, the San Diego dynamiter, in the six-round semifinal. Cobb knocked out Sammy Santos a few nights ago.

The black boy stopped Larry Murphy in five rounds. Murphy is the San Francisco fighter who beat Miller, fracturing his jaw. If Jackson gets over Cobb he is willing to fight Miller, Joe Dundee, Jack Thompson, or any of them.

Johnny DeLano, Jerry the Greek's Boston fighter who fought a sensational draw with Manuel DeLeon, comes back against Jimmy Alvarado. In Alvarado fans will see a great little scrapper.

The two fours are Vincent Martinez vs. Johnny Blair and Luis Ramos vs. Pete Magallanes.

POLO TILT CARDED AT UPLIFTERS

Whites and Reds to Lock Horns This Afternoon in Special Match Game

Those who witnessed last Sunday's polo game at the Uplifters' field on Beverly Boulevard are almost certain to be on hand for today's match between the Whites and the Reds which has all indications of being another nip-and-tuck affair from the opening throw-in. The game a week ago which they are still talking about went into an extra chukker before the Uplifters broke into the winning column on a shot from Scott Hackley's mallet.

DR. H. H. WILSON

Dr. H. H. Wilson and Howland Paddock who will appear on opposite teams today, were members of the California team which won two national championships at Chicago last summer which titles are still held by that team. Wilson will ride at No. 1 for the Whites while Paddock will play No. 3 for the Reds. In addition to Wilson, the Whites wil lhave Hal Roach at No. 2, Snowy Baker at No. 3 and John Brandeis at back. The Reds will line up with Dr. Rex Duncan at No. 1, Lyell Puckett at No. 2, Paddock at No. 3 and Clair Brunsen back.

Jimmie Jackson, formerly of Midwick, will give a play-by-play account of the game over the public-address system now installed at the field. The game is open to the public with ample free parking and will start at 2:30.

fended by Los Angeles A.C. stars, coached by Fred Cady. Mickey Riley defends the springboard crown while his brother, Johnny, defends the thirty-three-foot tower title. Georgia Coleman defends both women's diving titles.

The team championship in both the men's and women's events will be hotly contested. The New York A.C. squad of Kojac, Zorilla, Ruddy, Leonard Spence and George Fissler is the men's favorite, while the New York Women's Swimming Association team should retain the feminine championship. The presence of Helene Madison hits the L.A.A.C. girls hard as without the northern girl Miss McKim would score 20 points, which in addition to Georgia Coleman's ten and a sure relay place would mean the meet.

Both the Los Angeles A.C. and the Hollywood A.C. are sure to run the New York boys a close race in the men's championship, although Crabbe cannot be expected to win the meet single-handed as he did last year when competing for Honolulu. The program follows:

"PAYNE" MADE THIS MATCH A "NATURAL"

Matchmakers usually get plenty of painful headaches booking two good fighters. But the bout between Goldie Hess and Johnny Lamar was really brought to the surface by Cecil Payne of Louisville. Hess fought eleven straight main events at the Olympic while Lamar was not given a tumble. Payne twice whipped Hess, but Lamar coasted over Payne at Hollywood. Then public opinion demanded that Lamar get a chance. The Mexican boxes Hess at the Grand-avenue club Tuesday night.

LEGION CARDS LAST RACE

Quinn, Sharp Favored in Final Afternoon Program Today

The final and most pretentious Sunday afternoon program of automobile racing to be held this summer at the Legion Ascot Speedway is slated for this afternoon at the Alhambra Boulevard track when Francis Quinn, Jimmy Sharp, and other intrepid favorites of the open throttle game go to the post in a series of six races, featured by a thirty-lap sprint which will carry the lion's share of the prize money.

For several weeks past the competition on the dirt ovals of the Pacific Coast has consistently been getting keener and the speed attained by the various pilots faster, until this afternoon the battle for the championship of the Southwest is expected to result in some of the most spectacular duels ever enacted at the local five-eighths of a mile course.

JIMMY SHARP

Of chief interest to followers of the gasoline sport in this section is the "feud" between Francis Quinn and Jimmy Sharp. As has been the case in each event for the past several weeks, the veteran Los Angeles ace and the reckless young San Pedro pilot will rate as favorites with the battle for first money in the fastest races expected to simmer down to a nip-and-tuck duel between them.

Last week Sharp passed Quinn and annexed first honors in the main event, when a tire blew out on Quinn's Dayton special three laps from the finish. A week previously, Sharp led the procession until the twenty-eighth time around, when a tire on his Garnant special went flat and Quinn was enabled to come from behind to win.

These "movie thriller" wind-ups may have been only odd coincidences, but the fact remains that the pair of throttle knights appear about as evenly matched as a couple of Rockefeller's dimes. Qualifying records show that the Miller, which Quinn handles, is only a fraction of a second different in speed from the trim little racing job which Sharp drives, and in skill and daring the men apparently measure up just as closely.

However, anything is likely to happen when the throttle boys start burning up the curves and one of the so-called "dark horses" such as Walt May, Melvin McKee, Charley Gelston, "Speed" Hinkley or "Swede" Smith may provide the periodical surprise and flash home the winner in the headlining sprint this afternoon.

One of the features today is expected to be the appearance again of Wirt Stanley, a newcomer from Michigan. Stanley, who drives No. 84, provided a large portion of the thrills last week, when he made some of the most daring of theh veterans "take to cover." The easterner has his car in tip-top shape for this afternoon's series of events and says he will show the Pacific Coast entrants more speed than they have seen in years.

The races will get under way promptly at 3 o'clock with Frank Wykoff, the Glendale sprinter, slated as referee.

Fred Wagner will be at his customary post as starter.

HURD AND HAYWOOD TO CLASH THURSDAY

A rematch for Jack Hurd and Jack Haywood, light-heavies, is to be the main event on the Pasadena Arena ladies' night program Thursday night. Hurd scored a surprising one-round victory over Haywood, regarded as the favorite, two weeks ago.

For the ladies' night program Manager Cohan has arranged five other bouts of four rounds each, as follows:

Young Mickey Walker vs. Mayfield Groves, 148 pounds; Lewis Woolley vs. Anthony Aguilar, 120 pounds; George Starr vs. Jack Leyva, 135 pounds; Sammy Marx vs. Dutch Schipper, 142 pounds; Manuel Reyes vs. Jimmy Rodgers, 122 pounds.

JAY COHN ANNEXES CHICAGO NET TITLE

CHICAGO, June 28. (AP)—Jay Cohn of Santa Monica, Cal., national boys' tennis champion, added another title to his string today by defeating Jack Lynch, Chicago, for the city boys' title, 6-4, 6-4, 7-5.

Catherine Wolfe, Indianapolis, and Clara Zinke, Cincinnati, will meet in the finals of the women's singles for the title tomorrow.

IT'S TIME FOR FEAB TO GO HOME

Trumbull Hopes That Some Good Man Like Irvin Cobb's Judge Priest Will Take Charge of Godfrey's Cash and Get Him Comfortable Chair

BY WALTER TRUMBULL

(Copyright, 1930, by North American Newspaper Alliance.)

NEW YORK, June 28.—The question in Philadelphia appears to be whether old George Godfrey is careless, yellow or crooked. As a matter of fact, race horses and fighters were pretty honest, until discovered by the white man.

GEORGE GODFREY

As I understand it, Primo Carnera was to receive a certain portion of the gate, and was to pay Godfrey out of his share. Godfrey, therefore, was practically in the employ of Carnera.

Old George has fouled out before; yet there are only four fouls given in his record in the last eight years. I can't find that he ever claimed many fouls. The only man who stopped Godfrey was Jack Renault. That was back in 1923, and Renault was one of those men who, with ambition and spirit, might have been a champion. Godfrey never was a Peter Jackson, Sam Langford, or Jack Johnson. But he was too good for most of those he met, and, if he hadn't had a nice, easy-going disposition, they were times when somebody might have been injured.

RESEMBLED WATERMELON

For what may have been his final appearance in the ring, old George resembled somewhat an over-ripe watermelon, but he still knew how to keep a green beginner from hurting him any. George finished the evening without losing much flesh. White folks never have given old George any the best of it. Some think it hardly right to take any of the money he earned so artistically. Not that I believe for a moment that old George will not get every cent agreed upon. If he does, I trust that some good man, such as Irvin Cobb's Judge Priest, will take charge of that cash, buy old George a fine, comfortable cabin outside of Mobile, where he was born as Feab S. Williams, and see that he gets plenty to eat and a comfortable chair in which to drowse in the sunshine. Yes, it's about time for Feab to go home.

It is perhaps easy to be unjust to Primo Carnera. Knowing the setups he has fought, the arrangements which have been made, and the crowd behind him, one is not likely to give the mammoth Italian much credit on his own account.

UNJUST TO PRIMO

Yet, Primo deserves credit. He is extremely fast for a giant and seems to have picked up considerable knowledge of boxing. There are men who grow old in the ring without learning to use a left hand. Primo has a very fair left, and when you consider that his left mitt is the size of an old-fashioned washtub, you can safely conclude that it will annoy anyone it hits.

And Carnera seems to be tough. He can take quite a belt on the ribs or chin. It is almost too bad that nobody really knows just how good Primo is. Of course, if they could persuade Jack Dempsey to come back, they would have a million-dollar gate, no matter whether Carnera is good or not.

Receipts From Boxing Climb, Report Shows

SACRAMENTO, June 28. (AP)—Boxing and wrestling matches in California during the month of May brought to the State receipts totaling $16,281.21, James Woods, chairman of the Athletic Commission, said in a report to the Governor today. This amount, Woods said, is the largest taken in during the month of May since the commission was created, and an increase of approximately 40 per cent over the month of May, 1929.

Woods said that receipts and attendance of the American Legion clubs showed an increase of about 50 per cent over the same period last year.

The total receipts for 1930 to date aggregate $77,405.94, as against $60,993.02 over the same period last year.

LAKE ARROWHEAD SWIM SCHEDULED FOR TODAY

Feminine swimming and diving champions who take part in the 1930 American championships at Long Beach this week feature a big aquatic carnival at Lake Arrowhead today.

HELEN MADISON

The mile-high meet is being held under the direction of Fred Cady, Los Angeles A.C. coach, and he has made all arrangements for a gala carnival. The complete team from the New York Women's Swimming Association will compete intact. The team includes Eleanor Holm, Agnes Geraghty, Lisa Lindstrom, Adelaide Lambert and Constance Hanf and is the favorite to win the national women's title at Long Beach.

Helene Madison, the record-breaking Seattle miss, is also expected to compete as a warm-up before she enters the 100 meters, 880 and one-mile free-style races at Long Beach.

Cady will take his Mercury stars to Arrowhead, including Josephine McKim, holder of world records for the 440, 880 and one-mile outdoor events, and Georgia Coleman, who defends both low and high-board diving titles at Long Beach. Mickey Riley, outdoor ten-foot board champion; his brother, Johnny, outdoor tower champion, and Dutch Smith, indoor three-foot board champion, will also compete.

The program starts at 2 p.m.

MARSHALL FACES STECHER

Veteran and Former Champion is Next Opponent for Youthful Star at Olympic

Joe Stecher, the giant Nebraskan, who first won the world's wrestling championship fifteen years ago and is still a contender for the title, will return to Los Angeles July 9, for a finish mat bout at the Olympic with Everett Marshall, one of the best and most powerful young heavyweights the game has developed in recent years.

Stecher has not wrestled here since last year. After he returned to his ranch at Dodge, Neb., late last year, he went into heavy training for two months. At the end of that time he started out on a wrestling campaign which started on the east coast and ended in the Pacific Northwest.

During the past week Stecher has been resting and taking things easy. He had wired Promoter Lou Daro a few weeks ago he was ready to meet all-comers. The promoter decided to see what the younger heavyweight stars could do with the veteran top-notchers, so he decided to let them compete for the possible match.

Stecher and Marshall started out in much the same manner when they started wrestling. Stecher had his first match in 1913, and it was not until 1917 that he lost a fall or was beaten. Earl Caddock beat him to win the world's championship.

Marshall had wrestled for four years, three as an amateur and one as a professional, before he was beaten or even lost a fall. Lewis was the first to pin Marshall's shoulders to the mat, while Sonnenberg was the first to beat the airplane spin exponent.

MEXICAN POLO TEAM INVADES TEXAS

SAN ANGELO (Tex.) June 28. (Exclusive)—When a polo team selected by Gen. Joaquin Amaro, Secretary of War and Marine, from officers of the entire Mexican army, opens a seven-game series here early next week with an all-star San Angelo club, a dream of George A. Henshaw, Jr., wealthy San Angelo oil operator and sportsman, will have attained partial fulfillment. Henshaw's ambition is to establish a center for the training of polo ponies and for the staging of tournaments, including international matches, that will be the peer of any in the United States.

Few men spend over $500,000 on a hobby, and the number who get returns on what has proven a wise investment is small, indeed, but Henshaw is the exception to the first statement and those who know polo prophesy that his hobby will multiply his dollars manyfold. Henshaw already has provided equipment here costing around $300,000 and his program is only about half-completed.

Preparations have been made here by Henshaw and associates, other sportsmen and civic bodies for the lavish entertainment of the friendly invaders from the southern republic. San Angelo, before the end of the year, will be connected directly with Mexico City by rail through the completion of the Santa Fe's ninety-mile extension from Alpine to Presidio, where the line will join the Orient Railway of Mexico, which leads southwest to Chihuahua City and points beyond, and a return series with the Mexican army polo team is considered likely. San Angelo will be represented in the games here by the best players from two local polo organizations, the Rainbows and Concho Kids. Both clubs acquitted themselves credibly in tournaments this year at Fort Reno and San Antonio. Gov. Dan Moody of Texas and other high State officials are expected to attend the games.

The international matches are the forerunner of expected games with the best malleteers from the Argentine, Brazil, Australia and India. They will be played on what will be the practice field at the home of the San Angelo Polo, Riding and Racing Association, of which George Henshaw, Jr., is the head. Six fields for regular games have been seeded with grass and will be ready by late summer. The seven fields occupy but a comparatively small part of the 318 acres bought by Henshaw exclusively for his mammoth plant, located five miles south of San Angelo, fronting on State Highway No. 30, and between that road and the San Angelo Country Club on the South Concho River. The polo plant, the country club's eighteen-hole golf course, Bermuda carpeted throughout, and its facilities for other sports, boating, bathing and fishing, will give San Angelo recreational advantages the equal of many cities in the 100,000 population class.

Simpson Will be Team-mate of Wykoff's

Frank Wykoff of the University of Southern California and George Simpson of Ohio State University, bitter rivals on the track, will probably be team-mates for a night when a squad representing the United States meets the British Empire team at Soldier Field, Chicago, in an international championship meet on the evening of August 27 next.

The international meet will consist largely of relays and field events, similar to a meet of the same type held at Stamford Bridge, London, in 1928, after the last Olympic Games. The American relay teams have not yet been chosen, but it is considered a certainty that the Trojan star and Ohio flash will be invited to be members of Uncle Sam's sprint squad.

A few days before the big meet at Chicago, Wykoff and Simpson will face each other in the 100-yard dash in the national A.A.U. championships at Pittsburgh. Wykoff is now one up on the Ohio boy through his victory in the recent N.C.A.A. championships in the world's record time of 9 2-5s.

CRACKER-BOX CLUB THRIVES

Bay City Boxing Fans Like Bouts at Small Club

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28. (AP)—This city of seven hills, once the hub of boxing, has a palatial fight pavilion while Oakland's slugfests are put on in the huge civic auditorium but the leading money-maker of the section is a drafty, smoke-filled little space called National Hall.

Out in the Mission district of San Francisco, its customers throng in from all parts of the city to watch the boys plaster each other with gloves in bouts of short duration. Business men, judges and a lot of other bigwigs rub elbows with the proletariat.

Al Young, the promoter, has been the "racket" for twenty-five years. Long ago he gave up the idea of going in for title or "heavy money" fights. Instead he cultivates local talent, mostly inexperienced youngsters who by their very greenness furnish rustic fireworks that have the fans jumping up and down in their seats like fleas on a hot stove.

Young's club is referred to as the "House of Thrills" because there it is not unusual for a customer to expect to see a fighter knock his opponent out of the ring, kick him in the chin, or take a bite out of his leg.

Favored with a place of small seating capacity, Young necessarily pays small purses most of the time. But for fifty-two times a year, or sometimes a couple less, depending upon holidays, the boys thump and thud each other in Young's cracker-box. A money-losing show there is as rare as mustache cups for young men.

Young proceeds on the theory that small profit is better than no profit, and considerably more satisfactory than losing money. And so it goes. When the big clubs check up at the end of the year, they find that a couple of losing shows have cut deeply into the profits accrued from a few paying affairs. Young sits up a couple of nights worrying through his income tax.

GOOD FISHING REPORT FROM SANTA MONICA

Some notable catches have been made from the live bait boat Palisades off Santa Monica during the last couple of weeks, it was announced last night by Capt. Jack Dugan of the Morris pleasure fishing fleet. Halibut weighing over forty pounds have been caught and several white sea bass. The last few days have resulted in a run of large barracuda off the bay city, many of the fish weighing as much as fourteen pounds. The Palisades is on the all-day run, leaving the Santa Monica municipal pier at 8:15 daily. It is under the command of Capt. Orin Winfield, licensed pilot.

OLD-TIMERS DID NOT FOUL MUCH

Championships Were Won on Merit Those Days

Nonpareil Was Beaten When Barred Pivot Punch

Schmeling, Sharkey Only Heavy Stars

BY FRANK ROCHE

This is written in defense of the old-timers in boxing. The recent epidemic of fouling, especially in the heavyweight ranks, has [illegible] shaken the confidence of followers of the game nearly [illegible] which the [illegible] quite of [illegible] berry [illegible] with his [illegible] many [illegible] And [illegible] match [illegible] the boxing [illegible] cuts during [illegible] to the [illegible] even [illegible] the Queensberry rules will [illegible] thought of, when the boys [illegible] it out on turf settings with [illegible] knuckles, reveals the fact that [illegible] few fouls were registered [illegible] championship changed hands.

MAX SCHMELING

ONE STAIN

This stands out—no [illegible] championship has ever been won [illegible] a foul—with the exception of the [illegible] cent fiasco between [illegible] stumble bums Jack [illegible] Max Schmeling.

Here is a record of the [illegible] where a championship was involved in other divisions:

August 27, 1889—George [illegible] Blanche defeated Jack [illegible] sey, the old Nonpareil for the middleweight title, with a [illegible] punch, which was [illegible] barred as a foul blow. [illegible] Blanche, the marine, [illegible] the championship, but Ramsey was recognized until he [illegible] to Bob Fitzsimmons, Ramsey in 1891. La Blanche was [illegible] out by Young Mitchell in the meantime said that [illegible] buried any claim he had to the crown.

July 27, 1911—Johnny [illegible] the recognized [illegible] champion, was [illegible] Dewar on a foul [illegible] claimed the title on a knockout, but [illegible] continued to fight as champion until [illegible] Greb beat him in 1923.

September 2, 1926—Jack [illegible] won the lightweight championship from Battling [illegible] a forty-two rounds on a foul [illegible] Goldfield, Nev.

November 28, 1911—Willie [illegible] Ritchie won the welterweight championship from Joe Mandot on a foul.

July 4, 1916—Freddie Welsh defended championship against Ad Wolgast and won on a foul.

April 30, 1904—Joe Gans won the welterweight championship from Joe Walcott on a foul. He was not recognized by some as Walcott that night fought him a forty-round draw. Some, however, gave him the honor until 1906.

In 1929—Jackie Fields won the welterweight championship from Joe Dundee on a foul.

In the other divisions there are no records that we could find of the title changing hands that way or by any other low blow was registered.

When you look back at some of the fights that were [illegible] champions and their [illegible] over a period of time [illegible] back to the early 90's and find few cases where the [illegible] hit below the equator it [illegible] as though a word or [illegible] be put forth in their defense.

GREAT BATTLES

For instance we find [illegible] as this in Tom Andrews' [illegible] tles of the Centuries" [illegible] Dempsey, the Manassa [illegible] out Johnny Reagan in [illegible] rounds at Long Island on [illegible] ber 13. The battle was [illegible] two rings and lasted two hours. [illegible] first ring became [illegible] ter and had to be moved [illegible] miles away where the fight [illegible] ished in cold and snow.

In 1909 Dal Hawkins [illegible] Freddy Bogan for the featherweight title. After seventy-five rounds the fight was called by darkness and put over until the next day. Hawkins won in sixteen [illegible] They used two-ounce gloves.

There are numerous other incidents in the old records that showed great courage on the part of the boys in those days.

Harry Carr tells of the [illegible] cident connected with the [illegible] Nelson fight at Goldfield, when [illegible] Baltimore oyster shucker, won [illegible] the championship on a foul. [illegible] Siler was the referee. [illegible] esty was beyond question. The [illegible] blers who were betting heavily [illegible] Gans warned Siler that his life [illegible] in danger if the Negro did not win. There were some real tough [illegible] at the ringside and while [illegible] blow was struck or at least [illegible] claimed it was, one of these [illegible] jumped into the ring and [illegible] Siler." Well who won? Gans [illegible] around at the gunmen [illegible] the ring and lost [illegible] speech. The tough guy [illegible] ly took advantage [illegible] ed to the crowd. "The referee [illegible] Gans winz." And that was [illegible]

Another angle on this [illegible] tion seems to be this. The [illegible] inary boys who are not [illegible] know near as much about the [illegible] as the big-timers seldom [illegible] way out. It is the [illegible] notchers of today who take [illegible] liberty of fouling and trying [illegible] away with it.

DE MILLE, BURRAY TO MIX AT OCEAN PARK

In a main event that will [illegible] Bay District "natural," Angel Mille, featherweight cup [illegible] this region, will meet Bobby [illegible] ray, a tough customer and [illegible] puncher, who is rapidly [illegible] the heights in the eyes of [illegible] land fight fans.

Danny Boyle of San [illegible] invades the Southland [illegible] when he steps into the [illegible] circle against Billy [illegible] ner. The pair are slated [illegible] in a fast semi-wind-up.

OLD-TIMERS DID NOT FOUL MUCH

Championships Were Won on Merit Those Days

Nonpareil Was Beaten When Barred Pivot Punch

Schmeling, Sharkey Affair Only Heavy Slam

BY FRANK ROCHE

This is written in defense of boxing. The recent epidemic of fouls, especially in the heavyweight ranks, has no doubt shaken the confidence of followers of manly self-defense, which the Marquis of Queensberry endowed with his name many years ago. And yet a search through the boxing records dating back to the time even before the Queensberry rules were thought of, when the boys battled it out on turf settings with bare knuckles, reveals the fact that few fouls were registered where championship changed hands.

MAX SCHMELING

ONE STAIN

This stands out—no heavyweight championship has ever been won on a foul—with the exception of the recent fiasco between those two stumble bums Jack Sharkey and Max Schmeling.

Here is a record of the fouls where a championship was involved in other divisions:

August 27, 1889—George Lavigne Blanche defeated Jack Dempsey, the old Nonpareil for the middleweight title, with a pivot punch, which was afterward barred as a foul blow. Lavigne Blanche, the marine, claimed the championship, but Dempsey was recognized until he lost to Bob Fitzsimmons, January 16, 1891. La Blanche was knocked out by Young Mitchell in the meantime and that further buried any claim he had to the crown.

July 27, 1921—Johnny Wilson, the recognized middleweight champion, won from Bryan Downey on a foul. Downey retained the title on a knockout, but Wilson continued to fight as champion until Harry Greb beat him in 1922.

September 3, 1926—Joe Gans won the lightweight championship from Battling Nelson in forty-two rounds on a foul at Goldfield, Nev.

November 28, 1912 — Willie Ritchie won the lightweight championship from Ad Wolgast on a foul.

July 4, 1916 — Freddy Welsh defended championship against Ad Wolgast and won on a foul.

April 30, 1906—Dixie Kid won the welterweight championship from Joe Walcott on a foul. He was not recognized by many, as Walcott that same year fought him a twenty-round draw. Some, however, gave him the honor until 1908.

In 1929—Jackie Fields won the welterweight championship from Joe Dundee on a foul.

In the other divisions there is no record that we could find of the title changing hands where foul play was responsible.

When you look back at some of the fights that were waged between champions and their contenders over a period of time that dates back to the early 80's and before and find few cases where the boys hit below the equator it does seem as though a word or so ought to be put forth in their defense.

GREAT BATTLES

For instance we find such things as this in Tom Andrew's "Ring Battles of the Centuries" 1887—James Dempsey, the Nonpareil, knocked out Johnny Reagan in forty-five rounds at Long Island, on December 12. The battle was fought with two rings and lasted two hours. The first ring became submerged in water and had to be moved twenty feet and had to be moved twenty miles away where the fight was finished in cold and snow.

In 1899 Dal Hawkins fought Freddy Bogan for the featherweight title. After seventy-five rounds the fight was called by darkness. It was put over until the next day when Hawkins won in sixteen rounds. They used two-ounce gloves.

There are numerous other incidents in the old records that showed great courage on the part of the boys in those days.

Harry Carr tells an interesting story in connection with the Siler-Nelson fight at Goldfield, where the Baltimore oyster shucker was given out by Young Mitchell in the meantime and that further buried any claim he had to the crown.

July 27, 1921—Johnny Wilson, the recognized middleweight champion, won from Bryan Downey on a foul. Downey retained the title on a knock-out

NEWS OF SOUTHERN COUNTIES

BISHOP BURNS SPURS PASTORS

Plea for Modern Mental Equipment Voiced

Conference Head Addresses Young Ministers' Class

He Declares Day Past for "Anointed Numskulls"

LONG BEACH, June 28. — A plea to the rising generation of Christian ministers to approach the problems of the church and of society with the modern viewpoint and with modern mental equipment, was voiced today by Bishop Charles Wesley Burns in his address to the class of young ministers just admitted to the Southern California Methodist Conference, now in session here.

Bishop Burns expressed mildly humorous doubt if even the great founders of Methodism themselves—Asbury, Wesley, Coke and others—could accurately "show the way" to the complex and highly modernistic social organization of the twentieth century.

"It was a simple task for them to point the way toward the Kingdom of God," he said. "They traveled through the wilderness, but their trails were blazed for them and the message expected was the simple message of salvation and the Christ, who was able to save unto the uttermost. But who shall lead us through the wilderness of the modern life to show the way of Jesus Christ to our great massed centers of population? Who shall teach them to meet the anti-Christian, antisocial forces of today? To interest the women who come tired from the bridge tables to the morning worship service? Who shall teach them how to rear households of faith and to build the Kingdom of God in their own hearts and in their homes?

"There are three words that I would drop into your hearts. First, we are urging you to a scholarly ministry. The day has passed when anointed numskulls can acceptably minister in a Methodist pulpit. In order that Jesus Christ may be made real and dominant and regnant in the hearts and minds of the boys and girls and men and women who are thinking in scientific terms, the minister must be equipped for the modern age. A new shibboleth must be declared to this generation."

"When you cease to buy books, you will know that you have reached the dead line. When you are satisfied with mere lolling and loafing through the morning instead of stirring your souls and girding your minds with intellectual sweat, wrestling with the great things of God to be declared through your message; when you are willing to waste the precious mornings, you may know that your batteries are run down. I covet for you that when you appear not only will people recognize a hail fellow, well met fellow Kiwanian or Rotarian or Lion, but a man of God, who has come with a message from God, couched in such scientific and spiritual terms that your communities and your cities will feel the weight and impact of your ministry.

"Second, I want to urge you to a shepherding ministry. You are called to be prophets, but you are also priests of God. You must be to your people as a shepherd. It is yours to hold the little children in your arms and bring them to Jesus Christ. It is yours to win wives to Jesus Christ—to shepherd your people. The weakness of the Southern California Conference is this, that in all the bustle and business and the rapidly increasing civilization, the old shepherding relation to our people is lost, and hearts are hungry and people are lonely in the crowd. There are two questions that the laymen ask of the bishop and cabinet. Not from what seminary did the minister come; but can he preach? Will he shepherd the church?

"AGE OF FRANKNESS"

"The third urgency of the modern minister is that his be a surrendered ministry. This is an age of frankness—brutal frankness, unchaste frankness. We talk about everything in the frankest fashion—why not in religion? When you go out into the larger and fuller tides of your ministry, if you go out with the flood tide of the Holy Spirit in your hearts you will succeed. Not only a ministry of scholarship and of shepherding but of surrender to Jesus Christ do I urge upon you."

Approval of the plan to organize a Pacific Coast divinity school was given by the conference at its session today and a committee was named to work with the other conferences on the Coast toward that aim. The committee is composed of Rev. J. Lewis Gillies, superintendent of the Los Angeles district; Rev. Walter C. Buckner, superintendent of the Pasadena district, and George H. Maxwell, Phoenix, Ariz., layman.

The conference voted to send Dr. Jesse L. Corley to China for a year to study missionary work. This was done on an appeal from the World's Sunday-School Association signed by Bishop L. J. Birney of the Methodist Episcopal Church and other leaders representing twenty-three denominations in China, who asked that a well-qualified specialist in religious education be assigned.

The request resulted from recent recommendations by the Chinese government regarding the registration and curricula of Christian schools. En route to China, Dr. Corley may stop off at Hawaii to participate in the Young People's Christian Conference near Honolulu.

YOUNG PEOPLE DISCUSSED

"Young Peoples Work" was the theme of sessions today with an address by Dr. Samuel L. Hamilton, professor in the department of religious education at New York University, features of both the afternoon and evening sessions. Dr. Hamilton urged that religious education follow the principles laid down by Jesus Christ and that the way of life rather than the philosophy of life be taught.

Ordination services will be held tomorrow and on Monday the conference will hear the reading of appointments with officials anticipating that the conference will close by noon.

Methodist ministers attending the conference here this afternoon deserted their usual paths of doctrinal discussion to enter the unknown realms of magic and legerdemain when Rev. Crawford Trotter of Banning gave a series of mind-reading demonstrations on the stage before the convention.

With a corps of assistants he apparently succeeded in giving messages over a disconnected telephone and found the answers to questions written on paper and sealed tightly in a metal box. The demonstration was a part of the program sponsored for Young People's Day.

PRISON ENDS CRIME TRAIL

Riverside Sentences Charles M. Wilson, Jr., for Robbery of Service Station and Car Theft

RIVERSIDE, June 28.—A sensational eleven-day trail of crime echoed in Superior Court today as Superior Judge Morton sentenced Charles M. Wilson, Jr., of Los Angeles, to San Quentin for robbing the Shell service station at Seventh and Walnut streets at the point of a gun and stealing an automobile here, both on the night of May 31, last.

In custody of County Jailer Bailey and Deputy Sheriff Marple, who were transferring another prisoner, Wilson was started for the northern prison today to begin his sentences.

Robberies, burglaries, car thefts and offenses against a girl make Wilson a wanted criminal in ten of the leading cities of the Pacific Coast—Ione, Modesto, Stockton, Oakland, Santa Barbara, Los Angeles, Long Beach, Pomona, San Bernardino and Redlands. All the crimes were committed by himself and a companion, Jimmy Powell, with whom he escaped from Preston State School for Boys May 20. Wilson was committed for second-degree burglary in San Francisco. He had been arrested in Los Angeles and other cities of the Pacific Coast previous to that on various offenses, but his parents, reported to be substantial citizens of Los Angeles, always came to his rescue.

FOUR YOUTHS HELD FOR ARSON

Charged With Burning Many Costa Mesa Homes

"To Give Firemen Plenty of Practice," They Say

Quartet Certified to Santa Ana Juvenile Court

SANTA ANA, June 28. — Four Costa Mesa youths who are said to have wantonly burned nearly a dozen houses in that community in order, they said, to give their home fire department "plenty of practice," were certified to the Juvenile Court today when the quartet, Mark (Bud) Baker, Jr., 20 years of age; Harold Elmer, 18; Jack Nance, 18, and William Thomas Brown, 15, were arraigned on a charge of arson.

Fire Marshal Boyd Sleeper and deputy sheriffs rounded up the boys after an investigation that started after the mysterious burning of a vacant house at Seventeenth and Orange streets, Costa Mesa, April 15, 1929. Ten other houses were burned later under suspicious circumstances, it was said, and two of the boys, Nance and Brown, are said to have admitted starting the fires at the instigation of Baker and Elmer. The latter, who was employed at his father's service station, was said to have furnished gasoline for igniting the fires. Herman J. Zabel, in charge of the Sheriff's identification bureau, swore to the complaint against the youths.

Girl Vanishes; Whisked Into Strange Auto

PASADENA, June 28. — Snatched from the sidewalk in front of her home, 741 Sunset avenue, 5-year-old Elaine Bulloch was spirited away in a strange automobile late yesterday.

A warrant charging child-stealing was issued today against the missing child's father, George Bulloch, whose marriage to Elaine's mother, Mrs. Eva Bulloch, was annulled by the court, which gave her custody of the daughter.

Detectives assigned to the case assert that Bulloch was to be allowed to see his child once a week so long as he contributed $40 a month toward her support.

Mrs. Bulloch revealed to the police that her former husband has not lived up to this agreement and that she is in such financial straits that her light and water connections have been shut off.

Bulloch is believed by police to have taken his daughter to a Manhattan Beach bungalow, and this afternoon the local police requested the beach authorities to arrest him on sight.

Negro Girl in Crash Killed; Woman Injured

VENTURA, June 28.—A 7-year-old Negro girl was killed and one Negro woman injured late yesterday when the car in which they were riding blew a tire and overturned on the State highway near Springfield, about five miles east of El Rio.

The girl, Gladys Lewis of Pasadena, died almost instantly after the crash when she was pinned under the machine, which was driven by Clinton A. Arnold of this city.

The sedan, containing seven persons, had a blowout on the left rear wheel and, according to Arnold, started to skid when Mrs. Clara Samuels, 43 years of age, of Pasadena, owner of the machine, applied the emergency brake. Mrs. Samuels was injured slightly, but left Big Sisters' Hospital after first-aid treatment.

The fatally injured girl was rushed to General Hospital, but died before she could be treated. The child was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Lewis of 146 South Pasadena avenue, Pasadena, who also were in the machine.

SAN DIEGO PASTOR PREACHES FROM SAME PULPIT THIRTY-FIVE YEARS

SAN DIEGO, June 28.—Coincident with the annual dinner and meeting of the trustees of the Central Christian Church, held here recently, Rev. W. E. Crabtree celebrated his thirty-fifth consecutive year as pastor of the local house of worship at Ninth and F streets. The church was filled with flowers in tribute to the unique event.

Honored by his congregation, by his fellow-ministers of this city, and by the host of friends he has developed in his career here, Dr. Crabtree and his church hold the unique position of being the only church of the Disciples of Christ in the country that can boast of so long a mutual connection.

Of the small congregation which welcomed Dr. Crabtree to the church in 1895, in the one-room building on Thirteenth street between F and G streets, fourteen sat at a special table, and among them was Mrs. N. Boone, who was among the charter members who started the church's career in 1886.

COLLEAGUES PAY TRIBUTE

It was a program of eulogy and reminiscence. Among the local ministers who paid tribute to their fellow-clergyman were Rev. Wallace E. Hamilton, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church; Rev. Charles L. Barnes, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church; Dr. Frank Linder, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, and Rev. John Bunyan Smith, pastor of the First Baptist Church.

Reminiscences of his first years in San Diego were recalled by Dr. Crabtree, who began his work here in 1895. "The city at that time," he said, "had a population of about 12,000. A rude little frame building on an inside lot on Thirteenth street, near F, housed our church. The street in front of the building wasn't even graded. I remember the spirit of the times was so dead that on Sunday when I conducted my first service here one of the elders petitioned the congregation for permission to enter protest against grading the street because he felt the expense of $50 or $60 was too heavy.

Rev. W. E. Crabtree

"We had no electric lights. We used kerosene lamps for years. How proud we all were when our first gas lights were installed. The city's chief illumination at night was from tower lights, clusters of bulbs on towers seventy-five feet high. There were about twenty-five of these tower lights in the city, each supposed to cast illumination for several blocks.

MULES DREW STREET CARS

"The only street car on Broadway when I first came here was drawn by mules. The line terminus was at Seventeenth street. Every time the end of the line was reached, the mules would be unhitched from one end of the car and rehitched on the other.

"The growth of the city was slow until about 1907, when John D. Spreckels announced his intention to build the San Diego and Arizona Railway here. That created excitement in the East as well as here, with the result that San Diego boomed."

Dr. Crabtree was born in Madisonville, Ky., of English parentage. He was graduated from the State Normal School there and taught school for three years. He was graduated from Kentucky University at Lexington in 1891 and from the Theological Institution in the same place in 1893. He then served in Lexington churches for some time, married Miss Ettie Goode and came here in 1895 because of Mrs. Crabtree's health, planning to stay only a few years. He says now he is content to stay in San Diego the rest of his life.

In the earlier episodes, when the star appears as a girl employed in a Parisian millinery shop.

Nearly ten years ago a film came from Europe that all but revolutionized the picture world. Pola Negri was its star; Ernst Lubitsch, its director, and Emil Jannings played the brilliant role of Louis XV. The title of the picture was "Passion," and it was the story of Du Barry.

Again comes a film with much the same historical setting, but different to a degree in plot and circumstance. Norma Talmadge is the star on this occasion. William Farnum returns to the screen as the King. The new "Du Barry—Woman of Passion" was directed by Sam Taylor for United Artists, and is adapted from the David Belasco stage play. It is Miss Talmadge's second talking production.

Norma Talmadge undergoes a magical transformation in her latest feature based on the Du Barry story.

"LET'S GO NATIVE" KNOWS NEITHER RHYME NOR REASON

Unusual farce full of hilarious action that will be hailed as "different."

Noise and mirth go hand in hand in the opening scenes, with Eugene Pallette (left) supplying both.

An island paradise is found when the ship-wrecked party is washed up on a tropical shore.—Photos by Kling.

By WHITNEY WILLIAMS

GAG MEN may now take their place in line—the ultimate in nonsensical screen antics has been achieved, and right rousingly, too. "Let's Go Native" has had no predecessor in prototype—nor is it likely to be equalled in the future in the way of follow-up pictures. It is unique.

"Let's Go Native" was written during production, rather than before the camera commenced to grind. In this respect all cinema precedents and technique were thrown to the winds—and by a stroke of good fortune Paramount turned out a film that will remain a memorable fixture in comic history. The film is a burlesque, a travesty, on all matters even remotely pertaining to motion pictures, and, in the vernacular of the ancients, "it's a wow."

A noisy opening starts the picture off to a hilarious and rapid pace, which never slackens either in fun or tempo. Eugene Pallette, as the creditors' man, is superintending the removal of all Jeanette MacDonald's furniture from her apartment, and the manner in which he accomplishes the job is something of a revelation in battle tactics. Scarcely an article of furniture remains unharmed after he and his men have tripped, stumbled, fallen and jumped with more or less rare objects of art and beautiful period pieces in their hands and arms. And just before the grand piano is speeded on its way time is taken out for Miss MacDonald, clad in a very enticing dressing gown, and Mister James Hall to warble a duet, followed finally by the barroom screams of the movers in their attempt at harmony. A very clubby sort of party, really.

Then, into the plot bursts William Austin and Jack Oakie, Austin as Basil Pistol, of the Chicago Pistols, and Oakie as Voltaire McGinnis. Upon questioning—and after being mistaken time after time as the French philosopher—Voltaire explains that when he was born his mother had a Jewish nurse, and when she told the nurse to inform the doctor that the newly-arrived infant was to be named Walter, the doctor misunderstood the nurse and wrote the name Voltaire on the birth certificate!

Voltaire is a taxi driver and Austin his fare when they are introduced, and after crashing into the police station when Austin insists upon swinging on the cab door while the taxi is still in motion the pair make a miraculous escape, and soon after arrive in the modiste shop operated by Jeanette MacDonald. Jeanette is about to start for Buenos Aires with her chorus of girls to appear in a revue, financed by an Argentine millionaire. James Hall, her fiance and heir to all the Wendell millions, has just been disinherited by Grandpa Wallace Wendell, fondly known as the polecat of Wall Street, and Jeanette, using her eyes, obtains for him a job as trimmer on the ship that is to bear her southward. Voltaire and Basil, in their dash from the law, decide to accompany him as fellow trimmers, so to South America they're off.

Mere words cannot possibly do justice to the action that follows. In fact, words could not begin to describe the extravagantly farcical events that transpire when the ship sinks, and our little party of friends, augmented by Kay Francis, land on a tropical island, where Skeets Gallagher reigns as king. Only a gag man in his dreamest and most insane mood could conjecture such a story where normalcy is a quality unknown and utter drollery is the order of the day.

Leo McCarey directed "Let's Go Native" in a more than satisfactory fashion. His years of comedy training are well apparent and neither he nor the authors of the piece, George Marion, Jr., and Percy Heath, resort to gags hoary with age. Freshness is essentially a high attribute and a ludicrous vein is standardized throughout.

In addition to those already mentioned in the cast are Charles Sellon and David Newell. Pallette, Oakie and Austin render particularly outstanding performances and the others likewise are excellent.

DANCING OUT THE MAYFAIR

The famous old club of cinemaland gives its last party of the season.

By GRACE KINGSLEY

"THE dear old Mayfair dancing club is going out, so far as this season is concerned, tonight, dearie, and I hear it is going out in a blaze of glory. So we simply mustn't miss it, because everybody will be there. Phillip Ryder, who was in 'The Desert Song' so long, you know, in New York and Boston—and, who is to play a big role in the picture, 'Adios'—and his wife, Aimee Torrianni, are inviting us, and Mrs. Irene Day is to be in the party, too."

Just about the first person we caught sight of, dancing happily with Johnny Mack Brown, was Mary Pickford. Mary had come with Johnny's party, which included his lovely wife.

Mary seemed like a little girl, bent on having a good time, and was looking very lovely.

"I'll just bet," remarked Irene Day, "that she wishes she never had to see another ambassador or mayor, or any other high-muck-a-muck as long as she lives. She has been a sort of official representative of Hollywood so long that she must have been simply worn out with all the burden of her duties."

Phillip Ryder was looking very handsome, and, of course, his voice always has that thrilling quality.

WE CAUGHT a glimpse of Monta Bell dancing with Mary Lawlor, and others we noted were Janet Gaynor and her husband, Lydell Peck, Rufus Lemaire, Blanche Sweet, Mr. and Mrs. Darryl Zanuck, Mr. and Mrs. William K. Howard and others.

Betty Bronson was there with her German beau, Mr. Laurhoff, who has come all the way from Germany to be near her, and who is very handsome and devoted.

"Oh, there's George Arliss!" exclaimed Stella. "Isn't it a thrill to see him in evening clothes?"

Eddie Kline was there with the nice party which Reginald Denny and his cute little wife were giving, and Eddie, whenever we see him, always carries on his kidding about how somebody triumphing in something was really himself in disguise.

"You know the fellow that won the golf tournament yesterday," he confided. "Well, that was I. I was in disguise!"

THAT nice Arthur Lake entertained a lot of people, including Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woolsey, Florence Lake, his sister; Mary Brian, Mr. and Mrs. Alan Hale, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Tucker and Helen Bolton.

Arthur declared that he was scouting for baby stars, but couldn't find anybody at the party except stage actresses from New York, who scared him a bit with their cleverness. Excepting, of course, that nice Helen Bolton, and Helen told him not to be afraid—that new York stage actresses weren't nearly as formidable as they seemed, and that if he was a good little boy, and would turn his toes out and roach up his hair, she would invite him to her next party.

"OH, THERE'S Corinne Griffith, looking prettier than ever. I simply must go and say hello to her!" cried Stella, and off she darted with Phil Ryder to pay her respects.

Corinne said she was having such a delightful rest at Malibu that she had almost forgotten that there were such things as pictures.

Norma Shearer has done away with her boyish bob, and is letting her hair grow. It floated about her face bewitchingly.

"I suppose that, the stork being near, Norma, with a real feeling for dressing the part off the stage as well as on, thinks that long hair is more suitable," remarked Stella.

Bert Lytell came over and said hello to us in his own charming way. It was delightful to see him, and it appears that now that talking pictures are in, Bert is due for a wonderful comeback. We met his charming wife, Grace Menken. He was with Edwin Carewe's party.

The New York actor, Arthur Byron, was with Mary Pickford's party, which made the occasion seem more like Broadway than ever.

Edwin Carewe and his wife entertained, besides Lytell and his wife, Inez Courtney and others.

"So Eddie is going Broadway?" exclaimed Stella.

ONE of the biggest parties was given by Hal Wallis and Louise Fazenda. They had thirty-two guests, including Larry Gray, Ona Munson, Laura Lee, Graham Baker, Hobart Henley and Irene Del Roy.

"There's the bride, Mrs. Holmes Herbert!" exclaimed Stella.

The former Mrs. Thomas H. Ince was there with her husband, Holmes Herbert. She was looking very charming, and I'm sure she's entitled to happiness.

Robert Leonard and his wife, Gertrude Olmsted, had a party of ten, while Joe E. Brown and wife entertained James Hall and his fiancee, Merna Kennedy; and Ivan St. John was host to a crowd of guests.

"WHY, there's Mrs. Tom Mix and her party!" exclaimed Stella. "I haven't seen her in ages, but I know that she and Tom are reconciled, and are living together, when Tom is here, up at their Flintridge home."

William Seiter and Laura La-Plante were hosts to a number of guests. Laura was looking pretty as a pink after her long rest, but expects that rest to end soon, as she is to sign up with one of the big companies.

"OH, ENTERTAINMENT is to be impromptu! I'm so glad!" remarked Stella. "It seems only like a regular cafe with a crowd of dancing girls on the floor. And with all this New York genius coming to Hollywood, it would be most disappointing not to see what some of its stars can do."

That charming little Ona Munson, the Los Angeles girl who went to New York a few years ago, and bowled them over with her cleverness, sang a romantic love song with Lawrence Gray.

Charlie King was a most efficient master of ceremonies, and consented to double in brass by singing a solo or two and then a duet with lovely little Laura Lee.

Joe E. Brown sang and recited "Little Mousie," and William O'Neal, who sang the lead in "The Desert Song" in the east, and who has a perfectly gorgeous voice, gave us "One Alone" and an encore from "The Desert Song."

He challenged even our own idol, Perry Askam, but sang in an entirely different way—with less verve, I thought.

A CORD car was raffled off for the benefit of the Welfare League, in which Mary Pickford is so interested, it being an association to aid needy actors. Mary and other stars ran about, selling tickets.

After much excitement it was announced that Eddie Carewe had won the car, which is worth, as Mary was careful to inform us, the big sum of four thousand dollars.

Naturally, Eddie Carewe has so many cars already that he hardly knows what to do with it, but he graciously gave a check for a thousand dollars to the League.

"Well, I must say that I did kind of hope that some poor cutter or poor actor who had taken a chance would win it," remarked Stella, "but, after all, that thousand surely will come in handy in the League's activities."

THE FOLLY OF FAT
PROVED FOR 22 YEARS—AND TO MANY

CONSIDER the fact that countless people, for many years, have been fighting fat in the modern way. No abnormal exercise or diet to bring harm.

Note the results you see everywhere. Slender figures now prevail. Excess fat is the exception. New youth and beauty, new health and vigor, have come to multitudes in the easy, pleasant, right way.

One great reason is a discovery that science made some years ago. It was found that most fat people had an underactive gland. That gland largely controls nutrition, and its weakness leads to fat.

Modern physicians, since that discovery, have applied a new treatment to obesity. They have fed the lacking substance.

Marmola prescription tablets, prepared by a famous laboratory, contain the factors they employ. So this effective and right method is at everyone's command.

Marmola has been used for 22 years—millions of boxes of it. Users have told others the results until Marmola now stands alone. A book in each box gives the formula and explains the reasons for results. So users know what they are taking and why the good effects appear.

Is it not folly to stay fat when so many have found an easy way to slender, normal figures? And the right way. Go try the method they employed. Watch the results from a box or two of Marmola, then decide for yourself what it means. A right condition means much to you. Go start today.

Marmola prescription tablets are sold by all druggists at $1 a box. Any druggist who is out will gladly order for you.

A STAR RETURNS

Kenneth Thomson plays opposite Ruth Roland.

Montagu Love and Doris Lloyd are the cause of all the star's marital difficulties.

Mother love enters poignantly, with Douglas Scott the little son.

She has been absent from the screen for years, but now makes her re-appearance in "Reno," a dramatic story of the divorce colony. Ruth Roland was once a reigning favorite, both in serials and features, and the news of her starring in this Sono-Art production should be joyously received by her fans. George J. Crone directed the film, and screen play and adaptation were written by Harry E. Chandlee and Douglas W. Churchill.

Stubborn skin troubles yield to yeast

SAYS SPAIN'S FOREMOST SKIN SPECIALIST

MORE than a hundred important medical articles and books have come from the pen of Dr. Jose Sanchez-Covisa, Honorary President of the Academy of Dermatology of Spain! He says:

"Skin diseases which before were treated locally are today treated from within, with quicker and more successful results.

"Pimples and boils are nearly always accompanied by constipation. Fresh yeast diminishes intestinal putrefaction and is of great aid in treating rebellious cases of these skin affections.

"When 'irradiated', yeast contains the 'sunshine' vitamin D, which has an extraordinary action in hardening bones and teeth."

For the health that brings true beauty eat 3 cakes daily of Fleischmann's Yeast. Each cake is rich in two indispensable vitamins—B and D. At grocers', restaurants, soda fountains. Directions on the label.

Leading Skin Doctors recommend Yeast:

DR. E. BRUUSGAARD, most famous skin specialist in Norway, says, "I have used fresh yeast for years."

DR. ALFRED BRANDWEINER, dermatologist of Vienna's largest free hospital, says, "Fresh yeast will keep the intestinal tract free of the poisons which upset digestion and cloud the skin."

DR. EDVARD EHLERS, internationally known Copenhagen skin specialist, says, "I invariably rely on yeast in all cases of rebellious acne, and for boils, in which its effect is astonishing. It should be continued until all poisons are eliminated from the system."

"My physician advised me to eat Fleischmann's Yeast"

(At left, above) "Busy days at school and nights at study wore me out completely," writes MISS ODETTE WILLARD of Montreal. "I was suffering from acne and nervousness. An eminent doctor here advised Fleischmann's Yeast and I ate it three or four times a day. The acne disappeared. Now I am perfectly well."

(Right) "An automobile accident left me in a very nervous condition," writes MISS VIRGINIA MATHEWS of Philadelphia. "My skin was horribly broken out . . . Soon after starting to eat yeast, a noticeable improvement took place. I slept better. My appetite came back and my skin cleared beautifully. I am delighted with how well I feel."

Fleischmann's Yeast (with the familiar yellow label) is the only yeast that contains "sunshine vitamin."

MAKING Long Beach the natatorial capital of the nation for the time being, the A. A. U. National championships will be run off in the seaside city's newly-completed swimming arena in Recreation Park, July 3, 4, 5 and 6, with, for the first time in history, the men's and women's events being held together. The meet is free to the public.

As a foretaste of the treats that will be provided diving fans, here are shown: Georgia Coleman, "Dutch" Smith, and Mickey Riley of the Los Angeles Athletic Club team, and Dorothy Poynton, the Pasadena Athletic Club's tiny member of the 1928 Olympic team, in some aerial stunts that few can duplicate. Included is what looks like an aerial kiss, but really is Miss Coleman taking off from the high board, while "Dutch" Smith follows from the low one.

The skirt has two flounces which droop low on the right side in graceful folds. Hat of black hemp braid.

Doraldina's Hollywood Tan, Palm Beach Tan and Desert Tan "Allura" give a perfect tan which can be removed at will. Following the "Fashions in Cosmetics" idea, Eugenia Gilbert, who has a flair for outdoor sports and air travel, finds Doraldina's Desert Tan "Allura" not only the appropriate shade for the skin for air travel, but appreciates the fact that "Allura" is a preventive of sunburn and freckles. Miss Gilbert wears here the aviation costume of black baby broadtail and white suede, gold kid applique design on bodice, trouser skirt of baby broadtail, hat of broadtail and gold kid; designed by Earl Luick, in which she will appear in the fashion sequence in the Warner Brothers Production, "The Life of the Party," soon to be released.

Splashy printed patterns against black backgrounds are the vogue at present. These prints, either in chiffons or silks, lend themselves to the afternoon dresses on the order of the one worn by Kay Johnson, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer player. An open-mesh hat, revealing the hair beneath the crown and showing a wide velvet bow at the back, blends with the costume.

Elizabeth Marie has spent a lifetime seeking out the secrets of natural beauty, and has given to the world her cosmetics, featuring "Masque de Glace," famous for beauty maintenance. Hazel Hayes selected this shiny black satin daytime pajama suit, trimmed with red brocade, from the interesting collection of imported boudoir accessories shown by Beevan in their two Salons on Hollywood Boulevard, across from the Egyptian Theatre, and on Wilshire Boulevard, near Gramercy, which also feature Elizabeth Marie's special treatments and entire line of cosmetics.

Colburn's Exclusive Fur Shop, of South Flower, finds that Southern California women are just as enthusiastic about furs in the summer as they are during the winter season, and are offering, in their exquisite Salon, creations for all hours of the day, which afford the well-dressed woman an unusually wide selection of correct and original designs in shades that are new and styles exceptionally chic. From this collection, Lucille Powers, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer player, chose this Hudson seal coat combined with rose beige ermine skins, which form the roll collar and flaring cuffs.

Molly Miller poses here for ladies who admire the truly feminine ...n gown, fashioned of aquamarine velvet and chiffon, train of chiffon with ...quamarine net embroidered in silver threads and tiny sequins, neck edged with white ermine, finished at waist with bow of ermine and cluster of French roses. Miss Miller will appear in this creation in the fashion sequence o... "The Life of the Party," filmed in natural colors

Alyce McCormick cut short her vacation at Palm Beach to rush to Hollywood to consult William Hepner, master of wigs, incomparable authority on hair and skin, before starting several productions in Hollywood. Mr. Hepner convinced Miss McCormick of the great advantage of possessing his splendid creation, the "Halo-Tress," and she selected several of various shades and lengths of hair. One lovely example, she is wearing here, fashioned of long, naturally curly hair in auburn shade, which matched her own hair perfectly and can be worn without detection. Hepner's Salons are located at 1001 W. Seventh St. and 6540 Sunset Blvd.

Charming Alyce McCormick chooses this dance frock, featuring directoire lines—blue silk net and satin dress, spangled in the tiniest sequins made—petals on skirt in two shades of blue and white net—designed by Earl Luick of Warner Brothers Studios.

ON BACKBONE BAR

By Albert W. Telman

(Another Youth's Companion story for our Junior readers.—Ed.)

With a final cough the New Broom nosed into the frozen rockweed on Horsehead Island, and rather stiffly the four scrambled out—Chester Roche, superintendent of Blagden Brothers' string of granite quarries; Bill Newbegin, his 19-year-old nephew, and Paul and Jim Macomber, both under thirty, but experienced quarrymen.

Peleg Somers backed his launch off at once, beating his thickly mittened hands together.

"Sixteen below zero's altogether too cold for me to hang round here all the forenoon, doing nothing. I can feel needles already pricking that toe I frose three years ago. Besides it looks like snow. I'll come back for you at 12."

"Cant blame you a bit, Peleg," assented Roche. "You'll be a sight more comfortable hugging the stove in Thurlow's fishing market. But don't forget to be here by noon. Remember we've got toes and fingers, too."

"And want to keep 'em," grinned Bill, slapping his mittened hands against his legs.

At 19, Bill had a muscular, matured frame, and a tall grace that even his heavy mackinaw and stout boots couldn't disguise. His face had a firm set that was a family characteristic, but his eyes held in humorous glint, and his mouth was moulded in a ready-to-laugh curve.

"You ain't in no fraternity house now," grunted Peleg as he shoved off.

Bill had been away a half-year at the State university. Peleg's remark brought a wide smile to his face, even as he realized that he was subtly on trial with the folks of the town. For no particular reason—just that he'd been away. Even the Macombers, he knew, wondered if his half-year at the university had softened him—and perhaps made him a bit too good for the people back home.

Within five minutes the New Broom had coughed herself out of sight under the gray January sky round the point toward Emoryville. Meanwhile the temporarily marooned prospectors clambered up over the ledges to an irregular amphitheater, blasted out of the seaweed slope of the island.

The old Horsehead quarry, abandoned for twenty years, contained a very hard, diamond granite, flecked with golden dots. A New York contractor had heard of it, and wanted a sample. If it met his requirements, Horsehead would turn $50,000 into Emoryville's pay envelopes before Christmas.

On a sharply sloping ledge lay a ton block.

"Let's have your striking hammer and bull set, Paul," requested Roche as he went round to the lower side of the slab. "I want to knock off a ten-pound piece. See those diamond spots! They'd sparkle brighter, if the sun were shining."

He struck two or three sharp blows. With a sudden crunching the rock slipped toward him.

"Out from under! Out from under!" yelled both Macombers.

The superintendent sprang aside; but his foot slipped on an icy spot, and the sharp edge of the heavy block came down on his leg pinning him underneath it. He cried out with pain.

The Macombers leaped to help. With their bars they pried up the slab, and Bill Newbegin dragged his uncle out.

"Better take . . ." said Roche, but he got no further. His face whitened; he gasped and fainted.

"I'm afraid he's broken his leg," said Jim Macomber gruffly. "Come on, Bill! Let's get him into the old blacksmith-shop. Lively! It'll hurt him less if we move him before he comes to. Take his feet, Bill!"

As they lifted the insensible superintendent, a little stream of blood spattered on the ledge.

"Put him down! Quick!"

An examination showed that the sharp edge of the granite had lacerated an artery. A rude tourniquet, hastily made of a stick and a handkerchief, checked most of the bleeding. Soon they were in the blacksmith shop.

"A fire, Paul!" commanded the elder Macomber.

Fortunately there were plenty of old boards lying about. By the time they had a blaze going Roche was beginning to regain consciousness. They had made him as comfortable as possible; but still the bleeding continued.

"We ought to have Dr. Prince here right away," said Jim. "But how can we? The New Broom won't be back till twelve; and that's more than three hours away. Got to get the doc right off."

"I'll get word to the doctor," volunteered Bill Newbegin.

"How?"

"I'll wade across Backbone Bar to the mainland, go through the woods to Eben Southworth's, and 'phone Peleg to fetch Dr. Prince as soon as he can."

The Macombers looked at Bill doubtfully. They seemed to be measuring him.

"Sure you can find your way across the bar?" Jim asked, at last.

"Dead easy! I've gunned and fished 'round here so much that I know the shore like a book."

"Go quick, then! The tide's turned already. Backbone Bar'd be a mighty bad place to get caught on. Remember that!"

"I won't get caught," replied Bill confidentially.

As soon as he was outside the black smith shop he began to run, and in less than ten minutes he was over the top of the island, approaching the beach on the other side. A stinging breeze blew from the east, and it had begun to snow.

Backbone Bar curved in a crescent 500 feet long between Horsehead and Saddle Point. Its middle was slightly higher than its ends, and near each shore was a channel where the water flowed deeper and faster than elsewhere. Except at the lowest ebb, it was always submerged.

A half-hour earlier Bill could have crossed Backbone almost dryshod. But now the early flood, rising rapidly, had covered even the tops of the boulders, set like vertebrae along the spine-like ridge. He must cross at once, if at all. Fifteen minutes later the attempt would mean suicide.

To reach the mainland he had only to follow that line of ripples above the boulder crests, curving southwest to Saddle Point. The thought of his Uncle Chester, helpless and suffering in the blacksmith shop, spurred him on. Pulling up the tops of his long, red rubber boots, he waded out upon the bar.

At first the water deepened rapidly, until ten yards from the beach it lapped his knees. Then it shoaled again. Billy splashed along with his eyes on the ripples. The rising tide would soon smooth them out, and that might put him in a tight place. The snow was thicker, too. He could hardly discern the spruces on the outer horn of the Saddle.

On he pushed over the grating

There are Twenty Mistakes in This Picture by Zachary Schwarts. Can You Find Them?

THE LONG SLIDE

By Carl Kondo, Los Angeles.

McLane, clad in warm woolen clothes, and wearing tough hide gloves, stood talking to a sandy-haired man. The other, whose bearing bespoke authority, was speaking:

"You will have to wear those gloves until your hands have healed completely. And, above all, don't engage in any physical labor. Should you do so, I'd not count much on your recovery. Now, remember, don't take off those gloves!" With this parting admonition, he hurried away.

So McLane started down the road. After a period of walking, how long he did not know, he happened to glance up, and saw, bobbing and tugging against its anchoring rope, a sausage balloon. It was moored so low that its basket barely cleared the ground. Curious, McLane strolled in that direction, where he saw a group of men standing around the balloon, and talking excitedly. He joined the group, unnoticed by them.

"What shall we do?" one of them growled, "None of us have been up before, except Daugherty, and he cannot work alone. What a misfortune," and the speaker broke off to stare at McLane. "What the thunder you doing here?" he snapped, aggressively.

McLane flushed, but throttled his leaping temper, then turned on his heel.

"Wait!" said the other, laying his hands upon McLane's sleeve, "Can you by any chance take observations from the air?"

McLane hesitated before answering, "Yes," he said curtly.

"Listen!" said the other. "We have orders to find a hidden German battery; our only observer is shot in the leg; there is no time in which to get another man to replace him. Would you take his place?"

McLane paused, thinking quickly. Why should he do it? There was his doctor's warning, "Don't engage in any physical labor!" But on the other hand, it would help the "cause" in a small way. By jingo! he'd do it! "Does it mean physical work?" he queried.

"No," was the answer; "one just goes up and takes observations, then comes down again. The other man in the balloon writes down the observations on a map. You going?"

"All right," McLane announced quietly, "I'll do it."

"Fine" enthused the other man, "All set, boys! He'll take Lang's place." He turned to McLane, and pointed out a man standing near the balloon, and said, "That's Daugherty, the fellow with whom you go up."

McLane followed him to the balloon, and climbed into the basket, which tipped as he entered. Daugherty climbed in after him.

"Release!" he called.

The balloon began to rise slowly, it stopped at 5000 feet. McLane picked up a telescope fitting it to his eye, he surveyed the distant German lines. The glass was a powerful one. Close to a river there was a spreading group of bushes. In among them, a sheeny glitter like the reflections of the sun upon a rifle barrel, but it might well be only the reflection of the damp leaves after a recent rain. But, somehow, there seemed to be too many bushes grouped together; it was this fact which caused him to continue watching the spot, and his long observations were rewarded, for as the face in a hidden picture is often revealed by staring steadily at it, the wheel of a large can-

Rosemary Wiess Wins First Place; Betty Godbe, Second in Contest

Strange as it may seem, an unpublished conclusion to "The Cracked Mirror," by Rosemary Wiess, a chapter turned in at the last moment, totally eclipsed all other contributions, so the 85 points goes to this talented member of our writers' division.

The second prize of 45 points is awarded Betty Godbe, and the third prize goes to Carl Kondo, with an equally generous check given Gene Thompson, whose concluding chapter could not be published on account of its length. His work, however, carried plenty of punch, and fine logic, so let's take off our hats to these four live-wires, who competed against hundreds of other mystery fans.

Now that our finals have been announced, "The Black Ace" will appear in short order, so keep an eye on this renegade of the sky, the ruthless pilot, who lives by his wits, but fails to reap the harvest he dreams of.

With helpful criticism by Aunt Dolly.

Margaret Bunn: "Obeying Conventions" has an exceptionally fine idea back of it, but your meter is rocky. Correct this one fault, and you'll land in our "A" class, with flying colors.

Betty Godbe: "'Twas a Midnight," lacks, in some peculiar way, selling quality, perhaps the idea is a little far fetched. Anyway, try us again, Betty. Your work is ace high always.

John Clark: "The Haunted House" is badly involved; straighten out your thoughts, and words, and you'll have a fine bit of literature. It may interest you to know, your other poem, "The Spider" is really a classic. It fell in the "A" class.

Frank Ortis: "Put On Your Thinking Cap" is not presented in clear enough style. When Writing articles of this kind, you must hit the nail on the head. Try us again Frank you have talent.

Mary Racca: Your form is splendid, but crisis weakens your story, "A Merry Surprise." Interest dwindles in the middle, and lags to nothing at the end. Correct this Mary, and you'll be ace high in our writers' club. Good luck, Meche!

Verne Debney: "War" has only one fault; your ideas run away with you, and this confuses the reader. Learn to hit the bull's-eye squarely. First know what you wish to write, then do it so, in simple, forceful language. Never preach, or theorize. You have a gripping style, and write letters that belong in the Saturday Evening Post. More power to you, Verne! "The Complaint of a Fountain Pen" lacks press appeal, and "An Ode to Music" is a trifle heavy for Junior readers, peg away, Verne, you're a crack writer, so never let go.

Isabelle Burlingame: "The School Clock" lacks literary punch, although it is clever enough for the average junior publication. "The Seagull" has ragged meter. "After a Rain" was a little exaggerated. "Wild Mustard" very beautiful, if one or two lines are worked over. As for your "Fairy Island," the word classic describes it. So stay with us, Isabelle; you not only have talent, but know how to use it.

Marguerite Tarelo: "A Victory and a Defeat" is highly dramatic, but too morbid for our particular type of magazine. Hand us a chuckle

IS IT SPRING?

By Margaret Bunn, Glendora

I know 'tis spring
For yesterday I saw a farmer
Plowing up a field.
Turning over furrows of earth,
Moist, brown earth smelling faintly.
Little worms lift wiggling bodies
From the eager beaks of birds.
And soon there will be crops here,
Waving and shimmering in the wind.
The farmer, unconscious that he heralds spring,
Stolcally plows his field.

alive, I was attached to you, until the day you took your sleep under the pine trees. Then I was taken away, went to live in the village you see before you, where I'll have to remain, until you settle your score."

"Too much for me," cried Snoop, "I don't know what you are talking about. I still insist I have never laid eyes on you before. You are older than the Ampi, and have a very mean tongue."

"Why shouldn't I?" wailed his tormentor, "you made me what I am. I am your regret, and I'm not a pretty one. But the instant you forgive Saga, and stop feeling so mean, I will be free. The hump will disappear from my shoulders, and I'll be a most charming person."

"I've forgotten all about Saga," argued the rabbit. "I haven't remembered things clearly since the hunter found me that morning. So I'm sure you must be wrong. To tell you the truth, I don't like the looks of your village, or your people. They have peculiar ears, that look like bats. I never could stand these dingy, wide-winged messengers of the night."

"We can't help that," cried a rosy-cheeked regret, "we're so busy listening for travelers on this road, trying to find our masters, our ears have become very large. Besides," he continued, "your own are not small, so why should you complain?"

"That has nothing to do with it," grumbled Snoop, "we must go back to the Ampi Waumpus. He'll be angry when he finds we have gone."

Instantly, a hoard of regrets swarmed around him, shouting and calling to each other, "don't let him pass, he is ours to take away."

Snoop caught Beck's eye, and whispered, "It's a trap, what do you think? I don't like the looks of that village."

The dog shook her head, indicating distrust.

"We can't go," argued the rabbit. "besides, it's not necessary for us to accompany you. I told you, I had forgotten about Saga. There isn't a mean thought in my head."

"How do you feel, when you think of Twink?" asked the homely regret, and, instantly, he began to sparkle from head to foot. Crimson lights filled his eyes, and he took on terrifying proportions.

"See," he explained, "at thought of your mother, whom the queen betrayed, you are still angry; still full of regrets. I am very much alive. There is only one way to destroy me—you must come with me, and do just as I tell you."

Becky was barking and growling, leaping high in the air, hoping to frighten the bothersome strangers, but they stood their ground without flinching.

"Remember," they warned, "we can read your thoughts, so know you are trying to scare us, but it won't do you a bit of good. Both of you are prisoners, until you destroy us."

And they surged closer to the dog and the rabbit, driving them down hill with sharp little sticks.

"Terrible," moaned Snoopy, "this will never do. How I wish we had stayed with the Ampi-Waumpus."

"Too late now," said Becky, sliding down an embankment, "we're in for it now."

True enough, the elf-like creatures were guarding each step they took, leading them toward a brightly lit house, which was shaped like a mushroom, chimneys standing at outlandish angles on its top, the base bright with many red flames.

"Looks like a stove," whined the airedale. "I'd give half my life to be out of this. . . ."

(To be Continued.)

"Terrible," Moaned Snoopy. "This Will Never Do."

THE MIGHTY

By Martha E. Davis, Hollywood.

"I'm power!" cried Rameses.
He watched a jaspered flame
Mix with the perfumed Egypt's heat
And vanish to air again.

"I'm power!" bellowed Caesar.
He ruled the "universe,"
But even Caesar's name could not
Free Rome from a captor's curse.

"I'm power!" thundered Poleon
Amidst a Paris mob;
But Waterloo turned back the boast
To an exile's lonely sob.

Thus Dust to Dust Shall E'er Return
And Compensation's Law,
Shows gall in the core of Power's seed
And crimson the obscure flaw.

TOLD BY THE MOCKING BIRD

By Grace Storms, Glendale.

I mark the robin in the tree,
The English Sparrow too,
I imitate the nightingale,
All birds, of every hue.
The Blue Bird's welcome sign of spring,
The tanger's cheerful "chee"
The "tap-tap" of the woodpecker,
Are all the same to me.
The canary singing in the sun,
The Cat bird's dismal call,
The whirring of the humming bird,
Won't bother me at all.
So if you think in some bright day,
When you hear a cheerful song,
All the birds are serenading you,
You may be very wrong.

"SQUIRMY'S ADVENTURES" IN MAGICLAND

BY AUNT DOLLY AND PHILIP de LARA

ON BACKBONE BAR

mussels. The tide ran like a river, rising almost an inch a minute. He must go fast, where the footing was sure; and he must avoid the tide-pockets along the sides of the bar—ugly holes, scooped out by the eddying currents, and partly filled with sand or treacherous mud. Some of them would swallow a man to his neck.

Down went his right foot! He recovered himself quickly; but the misstep gave him an unpleasant start. He must keep on the ridge. A glance ahead told him that the ripples were growing fainter, smoothing out. A little chill ran over him. Crossing might not be so easy after all.

Horsehead lay over seventy-five yards behind, when a sudden snow squal blotted out mainland and island. Presently it cleared again. Bill halted, with the thought in his mind that perhaps it might be better to turn back; but again the mind-picture of his uncle drove him forward.

Without warning he went in above his knees. The next step plunged him deeper still. The third immersed him to the waist; and the freezing water flooded his rubber boots.

Bill stopped. The tide was running against him like a millrace; he must find his way back upon that ridge, and quickly, too.

The breeze-crinkled surface hid the bottom. He put his face down close to the sage-green water, and making a telescope of his hands, gazed through them at the black mussel beds, streaming with dulse and kelp.

Using his toes for eyes and fingers, he explored his way very slowly up the bar, until he stood again on its summit. He straightened up in relief, and looked around. His heart sank. Imperceptibly, while his eyes had been searching the bottom, the flakes had thickened. He could see no Horsehead, no Saddle Point. Everywhere, snow, snow, snow, dense and blinding.

"The Tide Ran Like a River, Rising Almost an Inch a Minute—"

Bill's head went round. He stood thigh-deep in the rising tide, lost on the bar. A salt river rippled by him, bearing little ice cakes and yellow clots of seaweed. He stood hesitating. Which way should he go.

It seemed foolish to be lost with solid ground under his feet and land only a short distance on either side. But how should he reach it? He remembered the tide pockets and the curving bar.

But if was not merely being lost. Given plenty of time, he could easily find his way ashore. The chief trouble was that icy, wolfish water. Not only its depth, but also its force, was increasing; every inch of rise made it harder for him to keep his footing. A time would speedily come when the tide would push him off.

It was useless to try to attract the attention of the Macombers. They were across the island, shut in the blacksmith shop, and would not expect the doctor for an hour. By that time seven feet of water would be running over the shoalest part of the bar; and Bill Newbegin would be somewhere else.

But couldn't he make the people at Southworth's hear? He shouted

"Help! I'm on the bar! Help"

He listened, shouted again. Listened. Echoes only came back, tossed from both shores. He strained his eyes for the dark outline of the seaward horn of the Saddle, but he could discern nothing.

He must be moving. It was useless to stand there until the tide swept him away and drowned him. He must go either forward or back. Which should it be—Horsehead or Saddle Point?

He thought of the Macombers, and their searching, testing gaze. Saddle Point it was.

The tide, he knew, was flowing from the northeast, parallel with the shore. He turned his right side to the current, and knew that he was facing the mainland. Sliding his feet along the bottom, he moved cautiously forward.

Foot by foot, yard by yard, now stumbling against a submerged boulder, now withdrawing from the slimy verge of a tide pocket, he zig-zagged onward. He must go fast, yet not so fast as to lose his unseen path. The tide crept up his body with appalling swiftness, but though he seemed to be moving with frightful slowness he restrained himself and doggedly stuck to the bar.

The water flowed above his waist. How far off was the shore? He stooped, found a pebble, and hurled it into the snow. He listened breathlessly and heard it clatter on rock, the point was near.

Bill pushed on with fresh strength. The tide was almost at his breast, when he hurled another pebble. Hurrah! The shore lay right ahead. But the water was deepened as he went down into the channel. Submerged almost to his neck, he lost his footing. Stabbing blindly with his toes, he barely caught it again.

The flakes thinned, and revealed a black ledge. Straight before him lay the hardest part of his trip—twenty feet of deep, strongly flowing tide. Could he cross it?

The snow again hid the ledge, and at that very moment the tide gently detached Bill's feet from the bottom. He paddled about with his toes, but could find no support. He began to swim.

Then followed a blind desperate struggle. Weighted by his clothes, numbed with cold, he fought off a creeping desire to relax. Throwing his shoulders alternately forward, he urged himself on—right—left—right—left. If he missed the ledge, he would be swept beyond the point and could never get back.

Once more the black nose of rock appeared, only a few feet away. He swam harder. It was going by—the tide was carrying him away. He must reach it—his own life and perhaps his uncle's depended on the next few seconds.

He tore at the water. Another stroke! One more! Still another!

His toes kicked bottom. Tottering he fumbled for a foothold, and caught a precarious one. The current whirled him half-around. If only he had something to brace against! Ah! A rock! Pressing his heel upon it, he kicked himself ahead.

At the next thrust his entire foot rested on bottom. Now he was walking. Inch by inch the water shoaled, and the pull of the tide weakened. Now he was out to his waist—his knees—his feet. Drenched and shivering in the chill wind, he staggered up the beach.

It was a cold trip up through the woods to Eben Southworth's. Bill was white with snow and sheeted in crackling ice, when he gained the farmer's door. Not, however, until he had telephoned Dr. Prince to come at once to Horsehead in the launch, did he take thought for himself.

And later, when Jim Macomber pressed his hand and murmured, "Good work, boy," he had recovered sufficiently to grin.

"I've still got my fingers and toes," he said.

The tide ran like a river, rising almost an inch a minute.

SCHOOL OF PRACTICAL EDUCATION

By Aaron Klein, Los Angeles

In the life of every boy comes a time when he wishes to enter college, play on a varsity football team, participate in all school athletics, and win his letter. He glories in sports and fills his head with knowledge that in nine cases out of ten he can never use.

Bennet in his book, "What Books Can Do For You," says that the boy who has just graduated is lost in a sea of knowledge. He wanders around for years, trying to slip into harness.

On the other hand, he says, the boy who just reaches high school, and quits for some reason, then goes to work, is far ahead of the other. He learns in the practical world of business the art of meeting people, the contact in business that he could never hope to get from colleges and books of theory.

Practical education and experience are great teachers, the writer continues, they make a boy wake up and realize the fact that the world is alive and moving. It teaches him to depend upon himself, and eventually prepares him for the future. Thus we can see if a boy wants to make something of himself, even if he did not go to college, he can do so by reading the books that interest him, and by going to night school and learning the trade or business that he has chosen as his career.

DON'T FORGET TO CAST YOUR VOTE!

Please cast your vote for the best poem and story in this week's Junior. The end of the month is almost here, and you'll be cheating some one out of valuable points if you fail to send in your coupon. So attend to it at once; delay is a fatal quality in organization work. And don't forget our new point system; take advantage of it as summer approaches. We'll do all that we can from our end, but we must have your wholehearted support. So snap into it! There's plenty of fun ahead.

Hawaii is the only place in the world where barefoot football is a recognized sport. The island has sixteen teams that compete annually.

My dearest Aunt:

Your picture was the outstanding attraction of the whole Junior Times. It was just stunning. I had in mind what you would be like, and I was right. I usually don't flatter people, but this time it is impossible. You are very pretty, in my opinion. I am fond of the same things you are. I never saw such a swell detective by Laura Brook anywhere else. You thought out a darling smile, and you like all the sports I like. Now I really know to whom I am writing.

The new rules are pretty stiff, and I guess it will be apes before I make thirty points, but I am going to keep on trying, anyway. I hope I will be able to get a letter in the critchens. I know they will help me. I am sending a lot of jokes from the book I bought. Quitting was fascinating, but I didn't know how to do it.

BUILD AND FLY ROCKET PLANE

By Elwood G. Chandlee, Los Angeles Playground and Recreation Department.

(This is the second and final article regarding the building and flying of rocket plane designed by Gilbert Westphal of the Queen Ann Playground, Los Angeles Times-Playground Aircraft League.—Ed.)

In this lesson we are giving you the details of the tail surfaces of the Westphal rocket plane, as well as of the rocket and its container and the chassis.

First we shall build the stabilizer. You will note that half of the stabilizer is shown full size and this will help you in laying out the parts.

First secure a piece of 1-8 inch square balsa of rather hard grain for the spar. This spar is ten inches long and should be sanded until it is smooth.

Next make the ribs. There are five required and they are shaped out from 1-16-inch sheet balsa. They are of the streamline shape. The center rib is 3 1-4 inches long. The middle ones are 2 7-8 inches long and the outer ones are 2⅛ inches long.

Next cut each rib out so the spar can be inserted. After this is done secure a piece of 1-16 by 1-8-inch hard balsa for the leading and trailing edges. Then cement these edges to the ribs.

The stabilizer tip is made from 1-16-inch sheet balsa carved out to proper shape and then cemented to the outer rib.

This completes the stabilizer except for the covering. The covering is Japanese tissue. Be very careful in putting it on as it should have no wrinkles when finished.

Next we will build the rudder. The spar is made from hard balsa 1-8-inch square by 3 7-8 inches long.

Next make the ribs. The bottom rib is three inches long. The middle one is 2 3-4 inches long and the top one is 2⅛ inches long. Each one of these ribs is made from 1-16-inch sheet balsa. They are of a streamline shape and should be carefully sanded so they will be smooth.

The ribs are cut out so the spar can be inserted through them.

The leading and trailing edges are made from 1-16 by 1-8-inch hard balsa. These edges are cemented onto the ribs. Be sure you get them on straight, as a crooked leading or trailing edge will spoil the looks of your model.

The tip is made from 1-16-inch sheet balsa and is similar to the ones used on the stabilizer. It is cemented to the upper rib.

You will note that there is a piece of No. 24 piano wire inserted up through the end of the spar. This acts as a pivot for the rudder, so that it may be turned. The lower part of this wire is inserted into the stabilizer spar. It should be a tight fit.

All that remains is to cement the stabilizer onto the autriggers. Refer to your three-view drawing for the proper location.

Next make the rocket container. First secure a piece of soft balsa 1½ by 2 1-4 by 5½ inches long.

Shape this container out as shown in the full-size drawing. After this is done, then saw it in half and hollow it out to a diameter of 1 1-8 inches. When you have completed this job then glue it back together.

All that remains to do is to cement the container on the under side of the wing. Your three-view drawing will give you the correct location of the container.

The chassis is the next problem. To make it you will need six pieces of 1-8-inch bamboo. Each piece is approximately six inches long. By checking over the chassis drawing together with the three-view drawing you will have no trouble in locating the correct points when the chassis is cemented in place.

At the wheel end of the chassis it is suggested you bind the bamboo ends together and then cement them thoroughly.

The wheel is two inches in diameter and it revolves on an axle which is 1½ inches long. This axle is bound to the forward strut with silk thread.

The tail skid is a piece of bamboo bent and inserted into the rear end of the rocket container.

Your model is now finished and all that remains to be built is the rocket.

This rocket is 1 1-8 inches in diameter by four inches long.

First secure a piece of heavy paper four inches wide by twenty inches long. Wind it over a mandrel until you have used up the en-

"How strange," marveled the rabbit, leaning over the side of the hill, "I've never seen such a sight, mushrooms do not have windows and fire in their stems. Neither do ordinary streets twist into knots."

"It is peculiar," cried the airedale, "such a busy little place. Well lit, too, hundreds of torches wherever you look. As for the people—did you ever see such things? They've ears like bats, and the body of a human. Can't figure them out."

Snoopy gripped the dog by her sand-colored neck. "As I live," he shouted, "They're after us; listen to that racket. Can you hear them, Becky? They're yelling at the top of their lungs. There they are. They mustn't get away."

"A Strange Creature Laughed at Them!"

The dog's hair bristled, "true enough," she growled, "the hillside is swarming with them. Nothing to do but stand our ground. After all, they are very tiny." But when they came face to face with these dwarf-like creatures, a great deal of their courage had dwindled.

"Don't like 'em," confided the rabbit, "don't like anything about 'em. Wonder who that person can be, with whiskers on his face? He has a bad eye."

"You know me," said the crooked legged stranger. "I lived with you long enough in the Opal Forest. You shouldn't run from me now, as you are responsible for my ugliness; the dinginess of my clothes, and the hump on my back. But now you have come, things will be better. I've waited a long while for you."

"Becky," said Snoop, in hollow tones, "do my ears deceive me? Is it possible, this hideous creature thinks he knew me when I lived under Saga's rule? If he does, something is wrong. I've never laid eyes on him."

"Maybe not, but you knew me, just the same," complained the little man, "do you remember the night Saga met you in the forest, and beat you from head to foot?"

"Perfectly," admitted the rabbit, "but that has nothing to do with you. Outside of Hadja, there wasn't a human in the Opal Forest. So, how could I have met you? Some one is making a fearful mistake."

"Think back," insisted the stranger, "you remember Saga. Now, do you recall the thoughts you had; angry, cruel, revengeful thoughts? When the Queen left you, after scolding you soundly, you said to yourself, 'I'm sorry I didn't fix that measely old cat. Just one good whack at her, and I'd feel better.' And all that night, when you were lost in the forest, you kept regretting Saga's escape. Now, of course, most people imagine thoughts pass out of your mind, leave without doing damage. But it's not so. All these cruel little regrets you had, kept heaping together—and as they grew larger and larger, finally became so very non suddenly stood forth in the bushes. McLane pointed it out to Daugherty, who marked it down on his map and said:

"Now we can go down."

"Right," McLane agreed, "I'm rather cold up. . . ."

From the clear sky, came the deep-toned roar of a motor. The sky was cloudless, the sun was slightly down on the western side, and as McLane looked in that direction, his eyes discerned a diving German Fokker plane! It sped over the balloon; bullets sprayed the basket, and the balloon burst into flames with a hissing roar! Far away, and faintly, came the savage bark of the Allied "Archies."

McLane recovered from his stunned condition to find Daughtery tugging at his arm. "Jump!" Daugherty yelled above the hissing noise, "Jump, before it's too late! You've no 'chute! Take mine!" He began to unfold his parachute.

"Thanks, no!" refused McLane, but as the other continued to unstrap the parachute, McLane lunged forward. "Here stop that!" roared McLane.

In the narrow basket, the two men fought to save each other's life. The basket rocked as they bumped and smashed against the sides. McLane was tiring rapidly, his breath came in hoarse gasps, but he fought grimly on, determined to save the other in spite of himself. He forced Daugherty against the side of the basket; suddenly stooped and grasping him by the ankles, heaved up, and pushed. Daugherty fell with a startled yell!

McLane leaned against the side of the rocking basket, and strove to quiet his pounding heart. The heat was unbearable, little tongues of flame snapped into life on the basket. There was no way out, except to die like a man.

Like a bolt from the blue, an idea exploded in McLane's brain. Quickly he climbed out of the swaying basket, and lowered himself until his feet swung into space; then he grabbed the anchor rope with his gloved hands, wrapped his feet around it, and slid! The rope whipped through his fingers, it became warm, then hot; a burning pain seared through McLane's palms, spread up to his wrists, his elbows, then burned through his body. Little puffs of smoke curled from his gloves, which occasionally burst into threads of flame. The pain, intense, burning, was an unbearable torture; breathing a silent prayer, he released his grip on the rope, and dropped.

The men on the ground had been horrified spectators of the shooting. Then one of them remembered that McaLne had not taken a parachute. A moment of dreadful silence greeted this discovery, one of the group ran for an ambulance, another sped, hotfoot, for a blanket, so when McLane dropped, he fell twenty-five feet, into a tightly stretched blanket!

McLane climbed to his feet, the earth seeming to be of the consistency of thin smoke. Hundreds of men stood around him, running, milling, round and round him! Abruptly McLane's knees jackknifed, and he slid to the ground before anyone could reach him.

The wildest of commotion followed, men milling, crying, shouting, as his body was laid on the ground. A dozen canteens were offered, some one was saying in horrified tones, "His gloves are smoking." McLane, hearing it, stirred uneasily.

"Hands," he mumbled, "are not worth much now. There's a Fokker to the west, and the sun is low . . . " The men about him caught their breaths. "Very low," he said, contentedly. One of the officers gripped his shoulder.

"Daugherty's here," he said, "he made it."

McLane opened weary eyelids. "Will you," he said, tell Daugherty he's not alone. I'll keep him company."

part of the bar; and Bill Nesbeth would be somewhere else.

But couldn't he make the people at Southerwin's hear? He shouted.

"Help! I'm on the bar! Help!"

He listened, shouted again. Listened. Silence only came back, tossed from both shores. He strained his eyes for the dark outline of the steward born of the double, but he could discern nothing.

and at that very moment the tide gently detached Bill's feet from the bottom. He prodded about with his toes, but could find no support. He began to swim.

HIGH LIGHTS OF HISTORY -:- Ancestors of the Modern Steamship -:- By J. CARROLL MANSFIELD

THE HONOR OF INVENTING THE FIRST PRACTICAL STEAMBOAT RIGHTFULLY BELONGS TO ROBERT FULTON, ALTHOUGH THE IDEA DID NOT ORIGINATE WITH HIM. FOR YEARS MEN HAD BEEN EXPERIMENTING WITH STEAMBOATS AND MANY DIFFERENT TYPES HAD BEEN DESIGNED.

MOST OF THESE DESIGNS REMAINED ON PAPER BUT A NUMBER OF STEAMBOATS WERE BUILT AND RUN WITH VARYING DEGREES OF SUCCESS BEFORE FULTON BUILT HIS FAMOUS "CLERMONT".

THE INVENTION OF THE FIRST PRACTICAL STEAM ENGINE BY JAMES WATT, A SCOTCHMAN, IN 1765 PLACED A NEW SOURCE OF POWER AT MAN'S DISPOSAL.

HAVING LEARNED TO EMPLOY THIS NEWLY-HARNESSED FORCE TO OPERATE PUMPS AND TURN MACHINES, MEN SOUGHT TO USE IT TO PROPEL WAGONS AND BOATS.

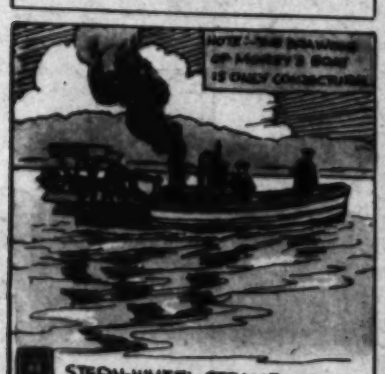
WHAT MANY-SIDED GENIUS BENJAMIN FRANKLIN COLLABORATED WITH JAMES RUMSEY OF MARYLAND IN PLANNING A BOAT TO BE DRIVEN BY PUMPING WATER IN AT THE BOW AND FORCING IT OUT THROUGH THE THE STERN.

IN 1784 RUMSEY DEMONSTRATED A STEAMBOAT, FORCED THROUGH THE WATER BY STEAM-DRIVEN OARS, TO GEORGE WASHINGTON AT BATH, VIRGINIA.

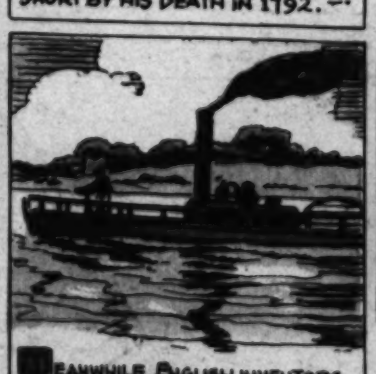
IN 1787 RUMSEY BUILT A BOAT DRIVEN BY THE EJECTION OF WATER AT THE STERN BY A STEAM PUMP. LATER, HE WENT TO ENGLAND WHERE HIS PLANS WERE CUT SHORT BY HIS DEATH IN 1792.

IN 1786 JOHN FITCH, A NATIVE OF CONNECTICUT, INVENTED A STEAMBOAT PROPELLED BY MECHANICAL PADDLES. IN 1788 ONE OF FITCH'S BOATS RAN SUCCESSFULLY ON THE DELAWARE.

FITCH LATER EXPERIMENTED IN NEW YORK WITH A PADDLE-WHEEL STEAMER. HE WAS THE BUTT OF MUCH RIDICULE AND IN 1799, THE UNHAPPY INVENTOR, IMPOVERISHED AND DISHEARTENED, KILLED HIMSELF.

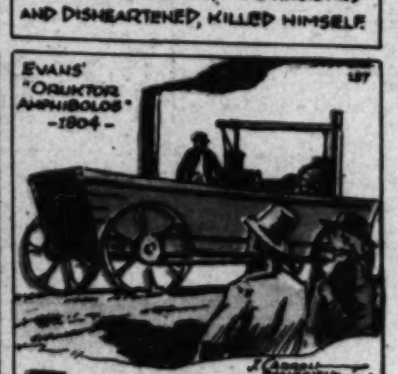


A STERN-WHEEL STEAMBOAT BUILT BY SAMUEL MOREY OF NEW HAMPSHIRE IN 1794 MADE A RUN FROM HARTFORD TO NEW YORK. THIS BOAT MADE FIVE MILES AN HOUR.



MEANWHILE, ENGLISH INVENTORS WERE EXPERIMENTING WITH STEAMBOATS. THE "CHARLOTTE DUNDAS" (ABOVE), A SMALL PADDLE-WHEELER, RAN SUCCESSFULLY IN 1802. NOTE THE STEERING WHEEL.

JOHN ERICSSON OF SWEDEN IS GIVEN CREDIT FOR THE INVENTION (1836) OF THE SCREW PROPELLER. HOWEVER, JOHN STEVENS OF HOBOKEN, NEW JERSEY, BUILT A BOAT DRIVEN BY A PROPELLER IN 1804.



MOST CURIOUS OF THE EARLY EXPERIMENTAL STEAM CRAFT WAS THE DREDGE INVENTED BY OLIVER EVANS OF PHILADELPHIA THAT RAN BOTH IN THE WATER AND ON LAND.

bers, and is the second in size in the United States. I believe your club has the larger membership, so I'm writing, hoping that I can have the honor of joining the club that beats our own club. I am not sure yet that this is the club, but as I got the section of last Sunday's paper at the Buffalo Public Library, I find you do not mention membership of the club. Perhaps there is more than the eight pages that I found, and the membership coupon is on it. However, you'll find that I want to be a member, regardless of the situation of your club. I would like to have you send me a letter, explaining the club, and also the subscription for the paper by mail. I would like very much to get the paper. The reading material in it I find very different from our Buffalo papers.

I'm a good poet, and after I find out about the club I'll show my talent to you, and the members of the club. Drawing and story writing is a little worse than my poems, but perhaps they'll do. Before I close, I must state that I'm 17 years old, do not attend school, but work for my bread and butter.

Dear Aunt Dolly:

Oh joy! Aunt Dolly, dear, your picture in the Junior this morning made me so happy. I am going to cut it out and keep it on my dresser. I knew all the time you were wonderfully nice, but I didn't know you were so beautiful and had such a twinkle in your eyes and such a darling smile, and you like all the sports I like. Now I really know to whom I am writing.

The new rules are pretty stiff, and I guess it will be ages before I make thirty points, but I am going to keep on trying, anyway. I like the criticisms. I know they will help me. Plug one end of this tube with plaster of paris and then let it dry.

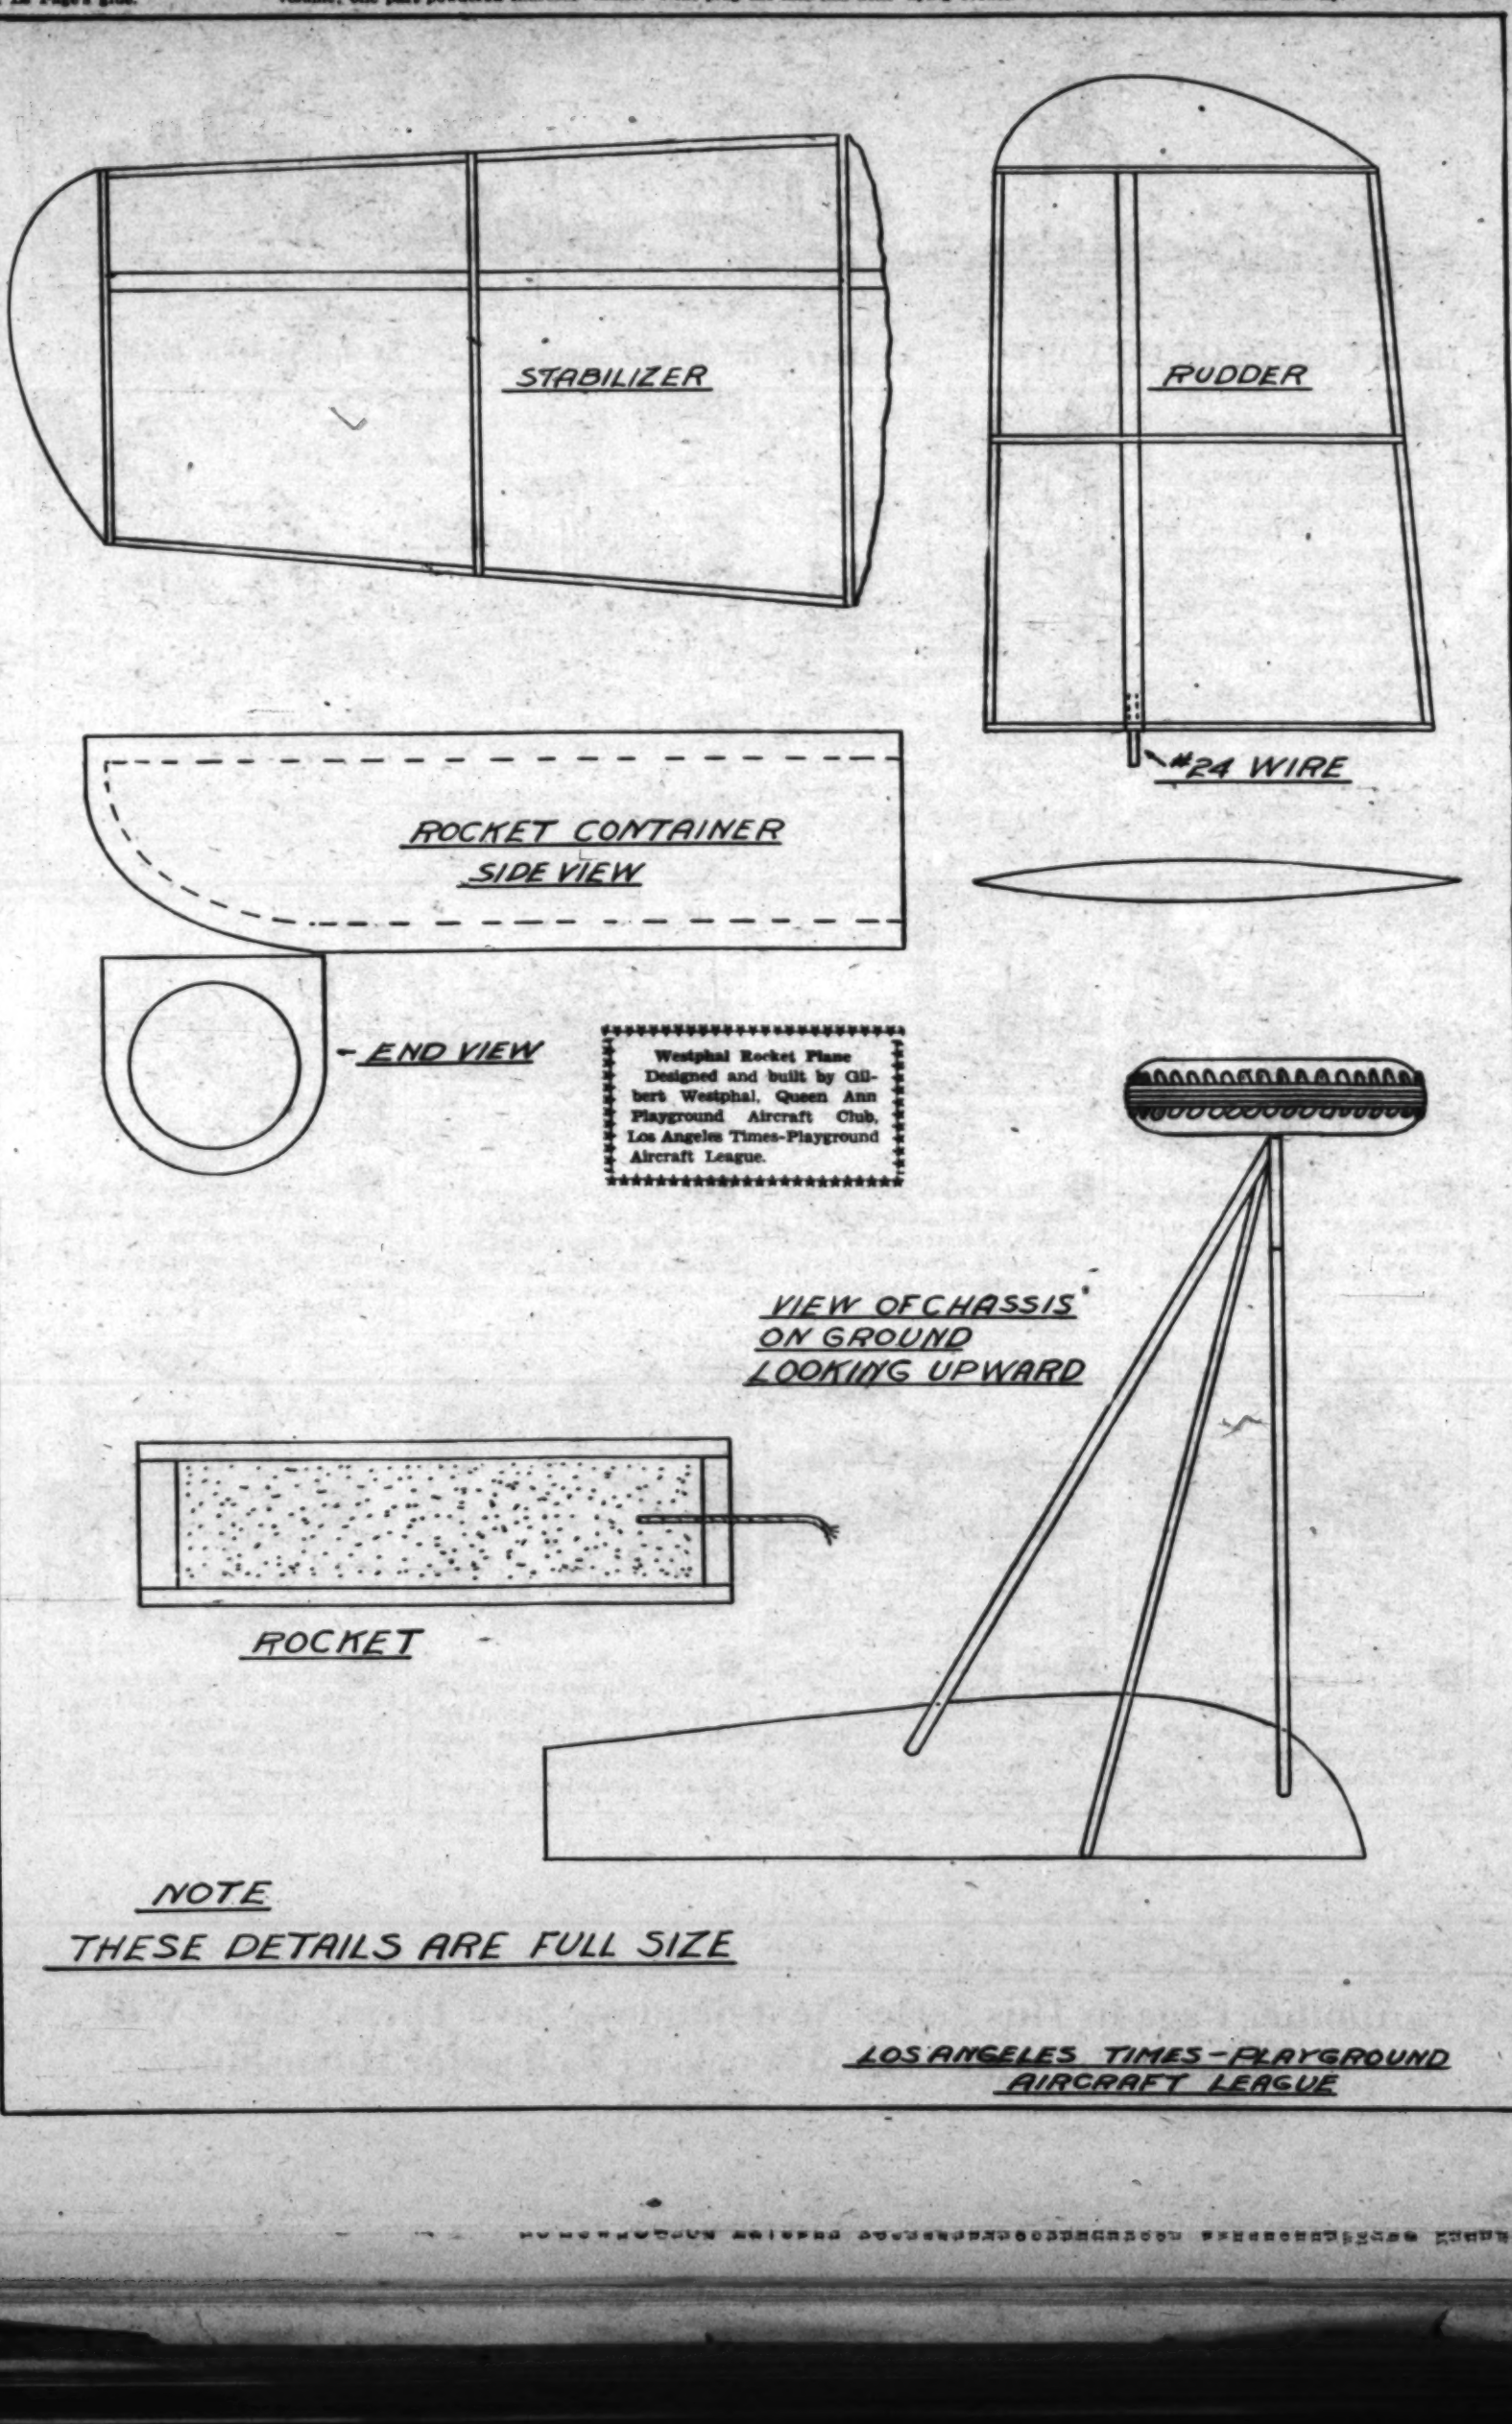
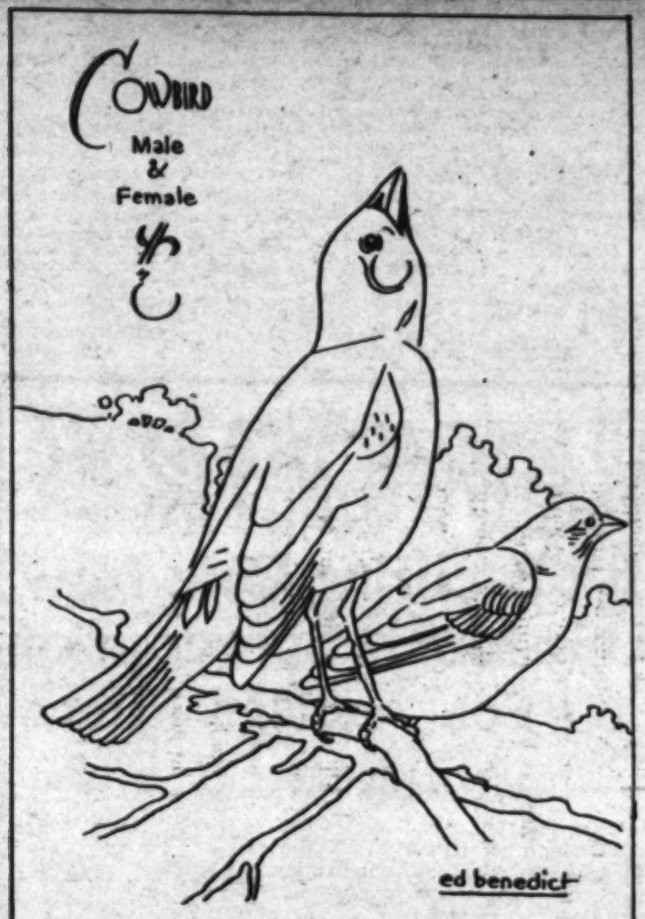
The powder is made as follows: One part powdered saltpeter by volume; one part powdered charcoal by volume; one-tenth part powdered sulphur by volume.

Mix these powders thoroughly and then pour them into the container. Next plug the line end with plaster of paris. Leave a hole about 1-8-inch in diameter for the fuse. The fuse is two inches long and is the same as you have used in night-flying events.

The rocket is then placed in the container and all that remains is to touch the fuse with a match and watch her fly.



CALIFORNIA BIRDS



Today you will find an intriguing chart by Ed Benedict, depicting a gypsy bird, otherwise known as the Cowbird, a scallywag and restless traveler of the feathered kingdom. It is interesting to note the Cowbird is perhaps the only one who fails to care for their young, building suitable nests in the springtime. Color this bird, whose feathers are a glossy green, with tobacco brown throat, as carefully as you know how. Then mail to Aunt Dolly, care of The Junior Times, and you will receive points for all charts turned in.

The Cowbird is the vagabond of the bird kingdom. It lives on the wing and has hardly ever been known to build a nest or rear its young. There is very little mating in pairs, the mother bird palming off her eggs on other dutiful females who, often as not, build a second nest, resenting such interference. While this strange bird is, to some degree, quite useful, consuming many ants, wasps, spiders, etc., it is as a whole, considered quite a shocking creature. They are great wanderers, circling from Southern British Columbia to Northern California, Texas and Louisiana. During the winter months, they are found in the Southern United States, south to Central Mexico.

This week our generous prize of ten points in the color-chart contest goes to Lois Strong of Arcadia, who turned out a stunning chart. Her conception of Snoopy in pink coat and green trousers, plus other startling combinations, places her as a headliner among chart fans.

But why give glory to a chosen few! Snappy as her work is, others may do equally well. The question is, have you Lois's determination, her foresight to make the most of opportunity? None of our ten-point members are asleep. Neither should you be! Snap into it, Juniors, color our next chart with redoubled pep and get your name on our Junior Honor Roll, which this weeks includes:

Lois Strong, Elizabeth Smith, Elsbeth Krohn, La-Reeta Clairette, Helen Brooks, Flora Schneider, Tracy Harris, Catherine Winquest, Betty Garvey, Marjorie Carl, Doris Carl, Barbara Leigh Grass, Gloria Johnson, Mitchell Lurie, Dorothy Doheny, Jean McCart, Gene Shelby, Hazel Millbank, Virginia Brown, Herbert Caveness, Jr., Helene Pirie, Sarlyn Emory, Christine Strain, Mary Lou Hare, Mary Buehler, Dorothy Williams, Helen Squires, Joan Everson, Marion Fowler, Jeanne Baxter, Loretta Henderson, Mary Hutchinson, Gene Sutton, Betty Lynn, Frances Keeley, Mary Whitcomb, Cliff Stewart, Claude Berquist, David Ireland, Winifred Freedom, May Lindsay, Betty Godbe, Mary Colomb, Jane Winston, Muriel Carver, Jim Perry, Alice Bahr, Hilda Clark, Jack Muriset, Elizabeth Moon, Richard Mansfield, Violet Barber, Charlie Sutton, Esther Mahon, John Richards, Madeline Freeman, Frances Fraser, Frank Rice, Roberta Higman, Patricia Higman, Earl Witherspoon, Douglas Arthur Williamson, Hazel Millibank, Edith Marion Chase, Betty Blair, Adella Shaw, Sheila Lloyd-Butler, Dorothy Williamson, Bonnie Jean Arveny, Elsie Tomlinson, Sarah Lipsey, Margie Asadoorian, Virginia Hill, Annette Cramblet, Marjorie Carmen, Jack Dixon, Rita Cooley, Elizabeth Shears, Elsie Dunkirk, Grace Donata, Toshiko Kojima.

Edith M. Chase: "Favored of the Gods" is extremely clever, but we do not handle plays.

Christian Strain: Your little Valentine poem was sweet, and will be held for our issue next year. A long wait, but this often happens in the magazine game.

Ed Butler, Jr.: "Buddies" is strong, dramatic, stirring to a degree. Your lingo of the trenches puts fire in your story, but temper some of the grewsome details. The plot is strength personified. Stay with us Ed, we need writers like you. As for "Chateau of Terror," it was beautifully done, fine plot as usual, but too melodramatic. The illustration, however, was stunning. Try us again and don't forget we're pulling for you.

Helene Pirie: "Youth of Germany" would not do for our pages, as the Junior is friendly toward all nations. While war is an abomination to every level-headed person, we cannot advance too strenuous theories where it is concerned.

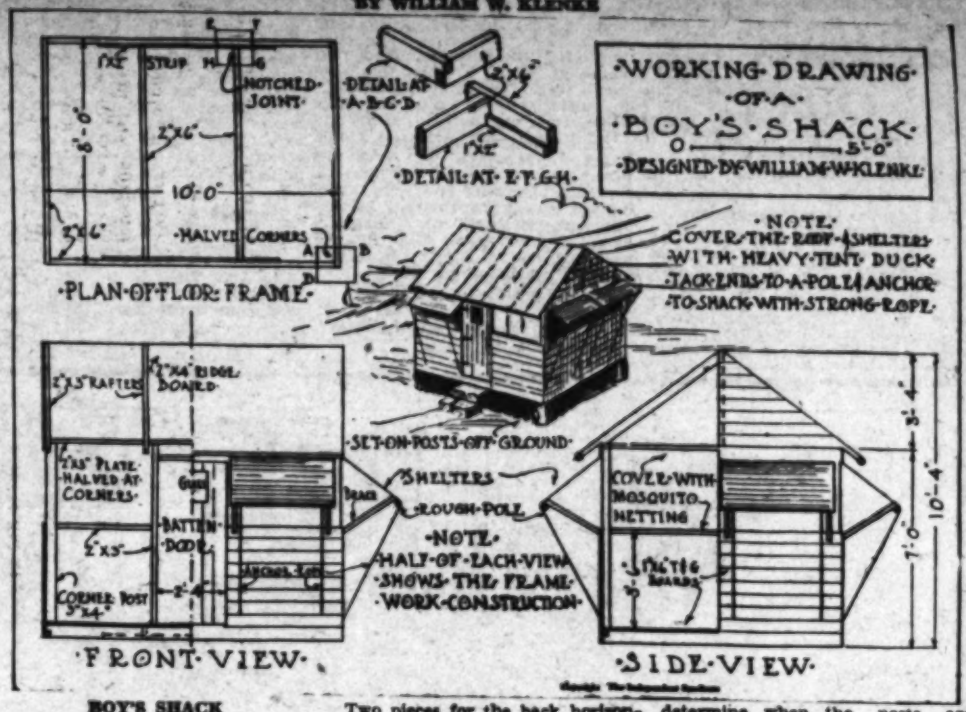
"THINGS EASY TO MAKE"

BY WILLIAM W. KLENKE



BOY'S SHACK

Well, boys, I've got a real treat enough for two boys to sleep in and for you this time—a shack large for general camping.

This shack is ideal for two boys who enjoy camping out for the summer months, either in the woods or near some lake, and best of all, if a boy is handy with his ax, all of the framing material can be cut right in the woods.

Select straight trees and trim the surfaces up a bit, or, if you prefer, buy some rough framing material, as suggested by the list given. I would advise using T. and G. (tongue and grooved) lumber for the flooring and the side walls to keep out heavy winds and rains.

This shack, as you will notice, is designed to also keep out flies and mosquitoes, as well as keeping out the rain and burning sun. The upper portion of all sides can be opened to give a free circulation of fresh air, with every advantage of sleeping out of doors without any of the disadvantages.

You will require the following materials:

FRAMING MATERIALS

Floor:

Two pieces for the sill, 2 inches by 6 inches by 8 feet.

Two pieces for the sill, 2 inches by 6 inches by 10 feet.

Two pieces for the intermediate members, 2 inches by 6 inches by 7 feet 8 1-2 inches.

Two pieces for bearing strips, 1 inch by 2 inches by 6 feet.

Walls:

Four pieces for the corner posts, 3 inches by 4 inches by 6 feet 3 inches.

Two pieces for the plate, 2 inches by 3 inches by 8 feet.

Two pieces for the plate, 2 inches by 3 inches by 10 feet.

Six pieces for the studs (uprights,) 2 inches by 3 inches by 6 feet 3 inches.

Two pieces for the front horizontal member, 2 inches by 3 inches by 6 feet 8 inches.

One piece for the head of the door, 2 inches by 3 inches by 2 feet 4 inches.

Four pieces for the end horizontal members, 2 inches by 3 inches by 3 feet 8 inches.

Two pieces for the back horizontal members, 2 inches by 3 inches by 4 feet 7 inches.

Eight pieces for the rafters, 2 inches by 3 inches by 6 feet.

Two pieces for the gable studs, 2 inches by 3 inches by 3 feet.

One piece for the ridge, 2 inches by 4 inches by 10 feet.

Flooring:

Eighteen pieces, 1 inch by 6 inches, by 10 feet.

Walls, front:

Eighteen pieces, 1 inch by 6 inches by 3 feet 11 inches.

Walls, back:

Nine pieces, 1 inch by 6 inches by 10 feet 2 inches.

Walls, ends:

Eighteen pieces, 1 inch by 6 inches by 8 feet.

Walls, gables:

Six pieces for gables, 1 inch by 6 inches by 8 feet.

Two pieces for gables, 1 inch by 6 inches by 6 feet.

Door:

Five pieces, 1 inch by 6 inches by 6 feet.

Three cleats, 2 feet 2 inches long.

Two rough poles (front and back) 10 feet long.

Two rough poles (front) 3 feet 6 inches long.

Two rough poles (back) 5 feet long.

Four rough poles (ends,) four feet long.

Duck in either eight, ten or twelve-ounce weight, enough to cover the roof. The amount needed will depend upon the width material you can get. Sew the different pieces together.

Cover the open spaces with mosquito netting, cloth or wire.

Three "T" hinges and a simple latch.

One piece of glass about 12 by 12 inches.

Sixteen rough braces for the shelters about 2 feet by 3 inches long.

Anchor rope and nails.

Step No. 1, the posts: To avoid a washout or excessive dampness, it is advisable to set this shack off the ground about one foot. Dig six holes and set chestnut or cedar posts in the ground, about two feet below grade. Your posts should be about eight inches in diameter, cut flat on the top and to the same level.

Step No. 2, floor framing work: Cut and fit the four sills together as shown on the drawing. Spike these pieces securely to the posts; the sill must be level. Now nail the 1 by 2-inch strips in place and notch the two intermediate pieces in places (see details.) Spike all members together with 20-D spikes and 10-D nails.

Step No. 3, flooring: Face nail 1 by 6 inches T. & G. boards to the floor framework. One by 6 inches will be dressed at the lumber mill to 7-8 by 5½ inches face. Nail to each bearing with two 8-D nails. Draw the joints up tight.

Step No. 4, framing the walls: Cut the four corner posts and all the studs (uprights) to the length shown, square at both ends. Toenail (nail at an angle) the bottom ends of one post at a time to the flooring. Plumb the corner posts so as to stand erect. Use a cord with a weight hung on one end to determine when the posts are plumb. It is advisable to tack a diagonal temporary brace to each post and to the sill. Now spike the plate (top member) to the corner posts, halved at the corner. In like manner fasten the studs in place; then the horizontal members.

Step No. 5, boarding up the walls: Face nail the outside boarding to the walls just as you did the flooring.

Step No. 6, rafters: For the boy who is not familiar with the use of a carpenter's steel square, it is better to hold a pair of rafters in place to the height indicated and lay out the cut at the ridge and plate. Allow for the ridge board. When cut to the correct angles, nail a pair of rafters and the ridge board in place at each end, then the intermediate rafters.

Step No. 7, the gable ends: Board up the two gable ends just as you did the side walls. If you find that these gable ends away too much in your exposure, then run two diagonal ropes on the inside to take up this motion.

Step No. 8, the door: Put several T. & G. boards of the proper length together, then nail three cleats on the back. Face nail the boards with 10-D nails and clinch the nails (bend over) on the back.

Step No. 9, the shelters: Make the shelters like awnings; that is, tack the upper end securely to the building, nail the bottom end to a rough pole. Cut two rough braces so as to hold the shelters at the proper angles. Strong rope will anchor these down as shown, or if you prefer, in a storm, close these shelters and fasten them in securely.

Step No. 10, the roof: Your duck will have to be stitched together so as to give the correct width. Tack the ends to the outside rafters and the lower ends to the rough poles. The poles should be spiked to the rafter ends. Tack the ends with one-inch nails about 1½ inches apart.

Step No. 11, miscellaneous: Cut out a window in the door and fasten in a piece of old glass with one-half-inch strips. Hang the door with three "T" hinges and put a simple latch in place. Mosquito netting is tacked on the inside of all openings. Gather a couple of flat stones for your entrance steps.

Now, boys, you are ready for a healthful and enjoyable vacation in the open. You will find this shack just large enough for two, placing the cots at each end, which gives a space between, just as you enter.

Plug one end of this tube with plaster of paris and then let it dry. The powder is made as follows: One part powdered saltpeter by volume; one part powdered charcoal by volume; one-tenth part powdered sulphur by volume.

Mix these powders thoroughly and then pour them into the container. Next plug the line end with plaster of paris. Leave a hole about 1-8-inch in diameter for the fuse. The fuse is two inches long and is the same as you have used in lighting evenin.

The rocket is then placed in the container and all that remains is to touch the fuse with a match and watch her fly.

CALIFORNIA BIRDS

"THINGS EASY TO MAKE"

BY WILLIAM W. HEDGES

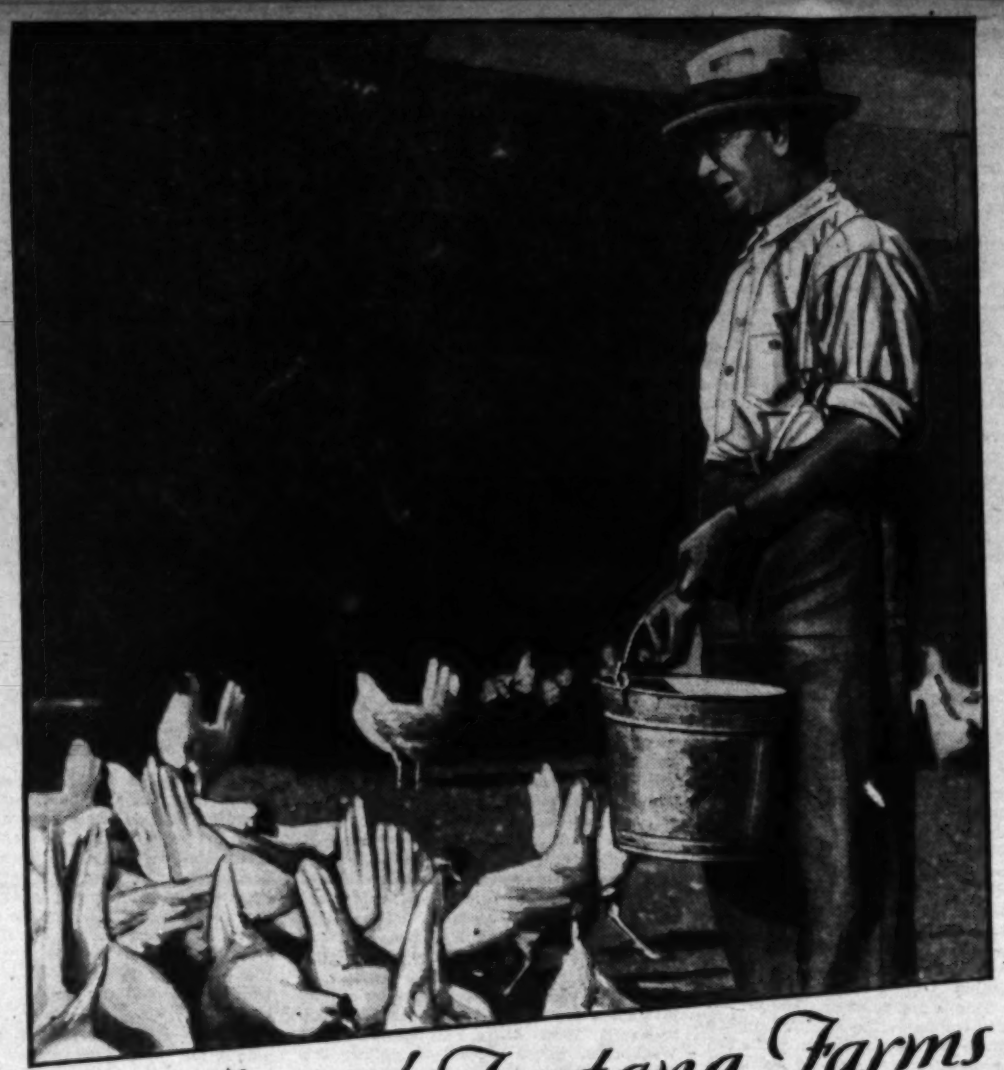
In his youth, general secretary of the Y.M.C.A., at Wilmington, Del. Then the ministry called, and he found a charge in Massachusetts awaiting him. From there to Maine . . . a new and larger church, and then a yet larger one.

Heavy duties, glorious opportunities, which his enthusiasm and zeal did not permit him to shirk. Until at last, after 28 years, there came a reckoning. "You must give up," said his doctor. "You cannot go on."

And so he and the good wife and their charming daughter came to California. His health improved. He accepted two charges in Long Beach. And again it proved too much for his strength.

"Get out into the country," said his physician. "Live on the soil; grow things."

It seemed a severe sentence at first. They knew nothing of farming . . . of country life. They knew not where to turn, or what to do.



. . . and then they found Fontana Farms

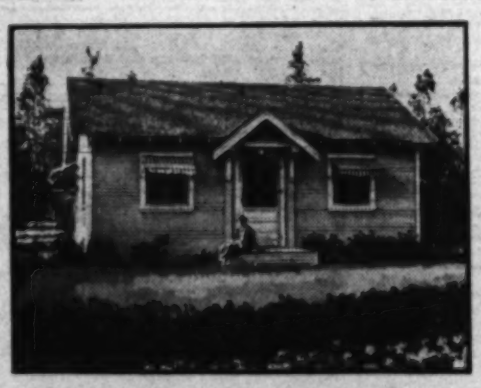
JUST the sort of place they were looking for . . . a lovely little tract covered with stately olive trees.

Here, amid the olives, they built their simple little home, and at the rear, without sacrificing a single tree, they built their chicken plant, to accommodate 2000 hens.

Money seemed to go surprisingly far here. And it was no time at all until the egg checks, coming in each week, helped wonderfully. And ministers and ministers' wives know how to be thrifty.

The daughter teaches in the Fontana kindergarten now. The mother has many lovely friends. For him there is a women's Bible class to teach at the Community Church on Sundays, and more than enough other church activities to consume such time as he can spare.

On their Fontana Farm he is winning back some of the strength expended during all those years in the pulpit. Also, he is building for such financial independence as few retired clergymen know. There are 900 laying hens now, and 1000 more sturdy chicks in the brooder house. The cockerels alone will pay for the whole brood. He is fast developing into a surprisingly successful poultryman, and the money cares that so many must face in the evening of life hold no fears for him, since he found his Fontana Farm.



For You, Too, Retirement Can Mean The Happiest Time of Your Life

When you have a Fontana Farm to retire to, retirement will mean, as it should mean, the happiest time of your life. There will be no money fears. With a small producing farm your income may be almost as great as in your active years . . . often it is greater. Expenses are very small. Fifty dollars a month buys all the meats and groceries that need be bought for a family of three. Your farm will supply the rest, and you will live in such luxury as few know in the city. There need be no worry about a regular income. Poultry and rabbits will supply that. Just an average poultry plant that one man can care for with ease will net forty dollars or more each week. The products of the soil . . . citrus fruits, walnuts, berries, vegetables . . . are extra dividends, declared two to four times a year, or oftener. When in full production, you can depend on two hundred an acre net from your trees. Many make much more.

Come now, if you are ready. A few thousand will start you. Come, however young you are, if you love the country. Do not wait to begin to really enjoy living. Or, if you wish to stay on where you are just a while longer, select your Fontana Farm now, at present low prices. Make the small semi-annual payments out of income . . . or use our happy ten-months-the-year plan, which omits payments at Christmas and Vacation-time. Start your campaign now, this very day, by mailing the coupon below for the beautiful Fontana Book. Forty pages, abundant illustrations . . . interesting, inspiring facts, truthfully told. FARM and GARDEN

COMMENT AND OPINION

Farm and Garden

Devoted to the multiform agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of agricultural production are gladly received. Address all letters to editorial department, Farm and Garden Magazine.

A Limiting Factor

"THE limiting factor of our civilization in the Southwest is water," said Dr. H. J. Webber, past director of the Riverside experiment station, a short time ago. "Perhaps the failure to develop enough water has been the cause of the mysterious disappearance of past civilizations which we know once occupied this land with very considerable populations. They have vanished; nobody knows just why or where they went, but if sufficient water had been found to sustain them, I think it highly probable that the white man would have found them here."

It is with great concern that thoughtful men consider the water situation of Southern California. Predictions are made, and with considerable foundation to justify them, that the day will come when Los Angeles will be built solid clear down to the sea. The climate and the other things that draw folks here will continue in the years to come as in the past. The same favorable and attractive surroundings will swell the size of other Southland cities and communities—if the one limiting factor is removed.

It is possible that our present-day civilization may be able to meet this difficult problem and solve it. It is not at all impossible that some practical and economically reasonable way of extracting the salts from the ocean may be developed by our chemists and scientists. They have done equally remarkable things.

In the meantime, we still have water resources of considerable size which have not been fully developed. These, in the course of time, will come into what might be termed "full bearing." Perhaps, just as important is the salvaging of water which falls and runs away to be lost in the sea. Southern California rains are apt to be violent in character and much of the water is lost under present conditions. Eliminating waste is a matter which should be attended to, promptly and wisely. The reuse of water is another thing which demands attention.

The initial steps are about to be taken in a large program of water conservation and the leading article of this issue, appearing on Page 3, discusses these. It merits the most careful reading by every citizen.

We should approach the whole subject with open eyes, realizing its importance to us. Growth is a condition of life, and the end of life follows the end of growth. We have had a phenomenal growth, in population, in production, in every line of endeavor, not just in the past ten census years, but during our comparatively short history. Our race is not yet run; our vigor has not been sapped; our people's bodies and minds are still strong and keen. We are living up to our present water supply, so far as present methods of use permit. Are we going to stop? Have we reached the limit of our water?

We do not think so. We have confidence that the Southwest has a far greater future, and that this very grave question will be answered conclusively, probably not in one way, but in many, combined to bring about a solution that will allow us to keep on growing.

Our Cover Page

What can be done with a waste space is a question which our cover page of this issue can answer pretty well. A year ago it was a bare spot back of Santa Maria Inn. Since then it has been made into a rock and desert garden of considerable charm. When so short a time can change desolation to beauty it doesn't seem worth while to have any desolation, at least not around those places where people live.

Contraband

IN DAYS gone by there was a touch of romance in smuggling, the stealthy approach of mysterious vessels to the coast and the hurried unloading of queer cargoes under the friendly cover of darkness. Nowadays it has lost its kindly flavor. Smugglers, it is recognized, are not a harmless bunch of folks with adventure in their blood, but violators of law, and frequently they imperil not just an impersonal government, but the welfare of its individual citizens.

Among the most dangerous of the latter-day smugglers are the unintentional ones, the ones who do not realise fully what they are doing. They resent what they regard as officious meddling on the part of inspectors, not along our coasts alone, but at State borders.

During the first five months of the present year, 141,489 autos were inspected at our borders, and in them were discovered 7148 lots of agricultural contraband. Out of every nineteen autos entering California, one was carrying fruits or other products which might have brought into the State some plant pest or disease which is held a menace to our $3,500,000,000 agricultural enterprise.

In these contraband finds were 176 lots of Florida citrus fruit, all of them potential carriers of Mediterranean fruit fly.

In addition to the auto inspections, 1817 lots of Florida citrus have been intercepted on transcontinental trains arriving in the State. Fortunately, in an increasing number of instances, inspectors are finding passengers willing to co-operate with the California authorities by either consuming or destroying the contraband before they enter our confines.

Standardized Building

THE work on farm structures which has been in progress in the United States for several years is still going on and the University of California is taking an active part in it. Prof. H. B. Walker, head of the university's agricultural engineering division, has been appointed to the Federal advisory committee by Arthur M. Hyde, United States Secretary of Agriculture.

This structure's project is an interesting activity, having to do with possible standardized practices which might work for economy and beauty in farm building. It arose from the fact that barns, silos and other similar buildings necessary to the carrying on of farm work are amenable to standardization, since they have a specified function, and, unlike homes, need not, unless it be in their outward line, express the individuality or preferences of their owners.

It seems reasonable enough to suppose that a well-designed standard barn of a certain capacity, if accepted by enough farmers in a district or State, might be constructed at a substantial saving, and without the necessity of worry or work in planning. California would likely have to have a different standard from the Middle West or New England, due to different conditions, but such variations would naturally be included in the completed plans. Many artists and architects, since the dawn of history, have held that a structure simply and honestly constructed, well-proportioned for the duty it must do, is thereby beautiful.

American farmers more and more are coming to accept farmscape beauty as a desirable asset. As for standardization, they accept that in their automobiles, their tractors, their tillage tools and their live stock, hence standardized buildings should require little explanation or advocacy.

What's in 'Em

In recent years such former fruit novelties as Japanese persimmons, avocados, logan berries, mangos, papayas, and many other interesting new fruits have become generally available on the market in season. As soon as a new fruit becomes common it is desirable to know how much sugar, acid and other chemical constituents it contains. Doctors and dietitians need such data if they are to include it in their diet lists. The United States Bureau of Home Economics recently issued tables giving proximate chemical composition of fresh fruits and fruit juices. Averages for new and unusual fruits and for apples, cherries, peaches and all the familiar kinds are shown in terms of carbohydrates, calories, and other chemical units. Separate figures are given for summer, fall, and winter apples, sweet and sour cherries, and other varieties or types of a fruit that differ markedly in their composition. Circular 89 entitled "Proximate Composition of Fresh Fruits" is distributed free by the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

No Monkey Vines

Recently a resident of Florida advertised in a Pasadena paper offering free tubers of an ornamental known as monkey vine, as long as the supply might last. Apparently the Pasadena people read their advertisements, as during the next few weeks over 125 packages of these tubers were received at the Pasadena postoffice. Correspondence with the Florida Plant Board by Deputy County Agricultural Commissioner G. R. Gorton established the fact that the tubers were a species of Dioscorea and possible hosts of the sweet potato weevil, a very serious pest in many of the Southern States, but not found in California.

The Poultry Yard

has been a good producer, it generally follows that she will be a good producer in the future, if she maintains good health and is properly cared for. And, vice versa, a poor hen is likely to continue so, unless her poor record has been due to faulty housing or improper feeding, items of mismanagement which can be corrected.

Culling should start with the eggs and never cease as long as chickens inhabit the ranch. The crippled, wobbly, or weak chick should be destroyed soon after hatching. Scrawny, unpromising individuals should be eaten or sold and only the fittest allowed to survive.

California Bulletin 434 gives the following findings of Melvin W. Buster regarding the relation of rate of maturity to egg production:

"Rate of maturity is a good gauge of potential egg-laying ability of Single Comb White Leghorn pullets in commercial flocks.

"The later maturing pullets are slower to start and quicker to drop in egg production.

"The earlier maturing pullets possess greater vitality.

"The easiest and probably the best time to segregate pullets is at 4½ to 6 months of age, or about the time five to 10 per cent of the birds are beginning to lay.

"At least 10 to 15 per cent of the latest maturing birds in the average Single Comb White Leghorn pullet flock should be culled out at 4½ to 6 months of age and disposed of as unprofitable egg producers."

A study in Santa Cruz county shows this relation of pullet culling and classification to farm income per hen. In this study seven flocks of pullets were not graded. Eight flocks were graded into two groups and nine flocks were graded into three groups, with the third group of this flock being sold as culls. The last of these groups where the culls were sold returned a larger egg production per hen, a greater farm income per bird, and a lower flock mortality. Show me the poultryman who would not like to make ninety cents per bird more. These nine flocks in Santa Cruz county made that much more than did the seven flocks where the pullets were not graded.

Systematic culling, that is, the handling and examining of every bird in the flock, should be done in the summer. The principal object in culling during July and August is to eliminate the "slacker" hens, while the object in September and October culling is to observe and select the best individuals to reserve as future breeders, provided you are breeding your own pullets. Health, vigor, size, trueness to standard type and color, as well as heavy egg production are points to consider in late fall culling.

Culling should be done every month of the year. It is not necessary to handle every bird in the flock each month, but the undesirable ones can be singled out and removed whenever seen. One very good method is to examine your flock after dark. By using a flash light you can look over each bird on the roost and then handle any birds that look questionable. Sick birds, birds that go light, typical culls, early moulters, and those with beefy tendencies can be culled from the flock in this manner. Figures kept on twenty-five flocks in one county in California illustrate the advantage of frequent over infrequent culling. Nineteen flocks were culled more than six months during the year, while six flocks were culled less than six months during the year. The flocks where frequent culling was practiced averaged fourteen more eggs per bird for the year, the eggs cost 2.6 cents less per dozen to produce and the poultrymen received seventy-three cents larger farm income per bird than did the flocks that were culled infrequently. This 73 cents is often the difference between a good profit for the enterprise and the failure of the business.

With the greater number of people going into the poultry business, the increasing of the size of the flocks already in operation, and the large portion of pullets being produced, poultrymen should be particularly careful to stress culling, for this increase means more eggs and hence a lower price for this product. A lower price for eggs invariably follows a prosperous year in the poultry business, because so many more go into the poultry game when their neighbors are making money, and a surplus soon results. The poultryman who culls properly, if he feeds and manages his flock as well as the average, will remain in the business and make a profit, when others are failing.

Valencia's Raisins

Valencia, Spain, reports that she still has 3,100 short tons of her 1929 raisins on hand. Of that crop, 11,600 short tons have been disposed of already.

Tall spikes of glorious blues in the fields of delphiniums, flanked by masses of rosy larkspurs and carpets of yellow and lavender stocks, form pictures of beauty not soon forgotten in the great commercial flower fields of Southern California. This picture was taken on the Waller-Franklin farms in Santa Maria Valley.

Orchid "Bulbs"

A rose by any other name may smell as sweet, but an elephant's ear is no orchid, according to the State Department of Agriculture, indignant over persistent "gypping" of a long-suffering public through sales of fake "orchid bulbs." For some years past, according to Director George H. Hecke, Californians have paid $5 and $6 for these bulbs after hearing the story of how they were smuggled past Federal and State plant quarantine inspectors. The bulbs, according to George E. Woodhams, in charge of State nursery service, are nothing more than calladium bulbs, commonly known as elephant's ears, and worth at best but a few cents apiece. Orchids are not produced from bulbs, according to Mr. Woodhams, whose service is trailing the sponsor of this newest version of the "smuggled goods" swindle game.

mote times—the kinds we read about but never see under ordinary circumstances. Growing in close comparison with them, we find the newest roses, the ones, in many cases, that have not yet been released to commerce by the hybridists, but which have been sent in compliment to Mr. Lester, for the increasing of this notable collection. A nice thing about this place is that the roses are not merely named, but are classified so that you may know which is a Bourbon, which a hardy tea rose and which a hybrid of any sort.

Up around San Francisco there are a number of dahlia growers who will be able to make a fine showing from now until late fall, none of the growing fields being

You can journey clear to the Canadian border and beyond it, for that matter, and still find places where are wonderful floral plantings on display, but if you aren't going so very far afield this year, you can find plenty of such things within a closer range of home. Turning south from Los Angeles you can see some fine dahlia farms, such as the Barker Dahlia Farm at Bell, the MacDonald, the Eisenmann, the R and B, all in the vicinity of Cudahy, Downey and towns in that district.

In Orange county you will see many plantings of gladioli and dahlias coming on now, none so extensive as the great flower fields up around Lompoc and Santa Maria of course, but sizable and worth seeing. Down in the South Coast section, around Encinitas, Carlsbad and Solano Beach, there are many big plantings of gladioli which will continue to make gorgeous splashes on the landscape until late summer, the largest being that of the Briggs Floral Company at Encinitas, where is a splendid show room, too, much appreciated by visitors.

Out on Point Loma, from now until into October, there will be a continual show of all forms of the lovely begonia, in more sizes, shapes and colorings than it would be possible to see in one collection anywhere else in this part of the world. Indeed, the collection at Rosecroft Begonia Gardens is said to be second to none, not even that at Kew Gardens in London. Since the growing of these charming plants is arranged in a particularly attractive manner, with the idea of making a perfect display, a visit to this place is more like going to a fine botanic garden than to a commercial growing establishment. The proprietor, A. D. Robinson, does not attempt to produce these delicate blooms in great quantities, being much more interested in creating new wonders.

Really, if one craves to see floral loveliness, there is no excuse for not satisfying that desire. The opportunity spreads itself on practically all sides. It is just about up to us, whether we take advantage of these opportunities or not. Great numbers of people do every year, and they see things that are of value to them and that furnish interesting material for their garden club meetings after vacation time is over.

Every Drop's to Be Saved

First Steps Toward Conserving All Water That Can Be Made Available in the Los Angeles Basin

By Bruce Buttles

WITH the recent allocation of $10,000 in State money, a general survey of the ground water conditions in the Los Angeles Basin will be started on July 1 by the State Division of Water Resources. This research has long been recognized as necessary by people who live in this area, and it comes as a result of the concerted effort on the part of the Los Angeles County Conservation Association.

The appropriation just granted was made at the request of Frank Merriam, Long Beach, chairman of the committee on surveys of the conservation group. Approximately three months of activity will be financed through this appropriation, and there is every reason to believe that further funds will be available as needed. The research effort will cover eighteen phases of the water problem in the Los Angeles Basin, according to a preliminary survey made by Harold Conkling, deputy State Engineer, and just released by the State Department of Public Works. Some of these lines of research will need to be initiated, although many are in progress at the present time. The State will act principally as a co-ordinating agency.

Eight organizations are now working toward the salvaging of local wastes. The Los Angeles County Flood Control District is active in the San Gabriel and the Los Angeles River watersheds with the dual purpose of salvage of waste and protection from floods. Orange County Flood Control District has laid out a similar program for Orange county. The Tri-Counties Conservative Association is actively engaged in conservation in the Upper Santa Ana watershed.

These agencies and others have been busy for several years past, securing data that may be useful in bringing about the saving of local flood wastes. The United States Geological Survey has been measuring stream flow and wastes into the ocean. The United States Division of Agricultural Engineering has been measuring wastes by plant life and contributions to the supply of water on the valley floor, and is looking toward a more efficient means of spreading water upon the gravel cones at the mouths of ravines issuing from the mountains. The United States Forest Service and the various counties concerned are actively protecting the forest cover on the watersheds. The city of Los Angeles is investigating the possibilities of the use of sewage water in industry and agriculture. The State Division of Water Resources has done a great deal of work in investigating the amount of waste in the Los Angeles Basin and the possibility of recovering it.

Underground Basin

The Los Angeles Basin is something that must be imagined, for it is beneath the earth's surface. Only the "rim" of the basin, so to speak, can be seen, as valleys, hills and mountains.

For the purposes of this survey the Los Angeles Basin includes almost all of Los Angeles county and portions of Orange, Riverside and San Bernardino counties. This area is drained by the Los Angeles, the Santa Ana, and the San Gabriel rivers and by smaller streams to the west of Los Angeles River. The major portion of that area lying in Los Angeles county receives its water supply from the San Gabriel and Los Angeles rivers, while that portion of Orange county included is supplied by the Santa Ana River.

Within this geographical area, which is called a "basin" as it really holds water—at least thirty separate sub-basins or divisions are recognized. These are more or less delimited, but are mutually interpendent. Anything affecting the water conditions in one of them affects one or more These basins accumulate water from the moisture that falls upon the surface and seeps through to the subsoil and from flood waters of mountain watersheds. From the sum total of these accumulations over a period of years, a reserve is built up and the underground water level gradually rises to a point where the basin "overflows" and the excess of water makes its way to the sea. This is what is known as ground water stores. At places, this water level may be so high that the excess water seeps from the surface in swamps or springs

As the Los Angeles Basin has been gradually developed, the lands brought under irrigation and industry established, the demands made upon the region for water have become greater. The surface run-off from the slopes was soon utilized and water users began to resort to pumping their supplies from the ground water. These reservoirs, apparently inexhaustible, in recent years have shown signs of depletion. In addition, water has been brought from the Owens River, a distance of over 200 miles. Still these combined supplies have not proved sufficient to keep pace with the Southland's unparalleled expansion, and additional water has been sought. Mono Basin and Colorado River supplies are still in the future, but an assured source appears to be in the salvaging of waters that are now considered waste.

Just what possibilities for use exist in the wastes of water that reach the sea each year from the watersheds of this region and from the sewers of our cities will be studied by State Division of Water Resources, making the survey authorized by the State executive. If this potential supply of water can be cheaply put to use, the Southland will be enabled to make another step in its urban and rural growth, since it appears that in this portion of America the only factor limiting civic and agricultural growth is water.

One Big Step

One of the biggest single steps of the survey will be to find a means of impounding the flood waters which ordinarily are lost in the ocean, and sinking them in the underground reservoir where they will be available to all users. Engineering can accomplish this by creating flood and diversion dams in certain canyons, subsequently spreading the waters upon the gravel cones at the point where streams emerge from the mountains to the plains and will percolate into the underground reservoir. As has been noted above, the county flood-control district has already done much of this work.

Another large project said to yield a supply of water equal to irrigating 50,000 acres is the utilization of city sewage. That this can be accomplished is seen in the developments of Pasadena and Pomona. Both of these cities have made a success of their sewage reclamation projects. A preliminary survey of the water conditions in the basin indicates that 127,000,000 gallons are lost each day in the Pacific Ocean from Los Angeles, Long Beach and San Pedro. This supply can be used to replace potable agricultural waters, which in turn can be diverted to domestic use.

The first work to do in protecting the resources of the underground water supply must be to prevent fires in the foothill and mountainous areas, engineers and conservationists unanimously declare. Once the brush and trees of the foothills have been burned off, the unprotected soil is washed away and the dry slopes are unable to hold water and release it gradually until it is needed for irrigation or is able to make its way into the subsoil. Much work of this kind has already been done, but further investigations of watershed protection will be undertaken by the survey agency.

Engineering work in connection with the salvaging of waste waters on the Los Angeles Basin area will be relatively simple to execute when compared with the difficult social adjustments necessary, according to George H. Cecil, executive secretary of the Los Angeles County Conservation Association. Mr. Cecil feels that the problems of adjusting the costs of constructing dams, of providing for sewage reclamation plants and for the redistribution of these wastes to places where they can be used, as well as other intangible phases of the problem, will present considerable difficulty. One of the most intricate problems would be that of providing for an equitable water right adjustment according to the involved riparian law of California. The survey will investigate these difficulties.

Dr. George P. Clements, manager of the agricultural department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, holds that these underground reservoirs will always be our

IRRIGATORS PUT CANALS UNDERGROUND

CALIFORNIA irrigation canals are a source of continuous interest to outlanders here for a day or a month or a year. These big systems, starting with a man-made river at an impounding dam, and reversing the natural systems by branching into smaller canals, and these into many ditches, and these in turn into thousands of smaller arterioles, have multiplied rapidly as the water table underlying the land, and supplying the wells, has fallen.

Now comes a new development, the making of underground irrigation systems, not by impounding the water and thus halting its absorption by the soil, but by spreading it out, fanwise, and encouraging the thirsty earth to receive and carry it down to the lowlands, where the pumps may feed upon it.

One such venture, fostered by the Tri-Counties Reforestation Committee of Orange, Riverside and San Bernardino, is at the mouth of Santa Ana Canyon, where 3000 acres of rocky waste, or wash, are being used as a vast sponge to take up water which otherwise would go dancing down Santa Ana River to the sea. Long low check dams across the wash are used. Recently the committee met at the site and surveyed the work already accomplished. This work has been going on for twenty years, and in that time has cost less than $200,000. A submerged weir is to be built this summer across the mouth of the canyon. This will cost from $80,000 to $90,000 more. These sums may sound large to some people, but not to anyone who has paid taxes upon the huge impounding dams which run, frequently, into eight figures.

Francis Cuttle, president of the committee, declares that the capital cost of water thus obtained is close to $2 per acre foot, as compared with $50 to $100 for water obtained from the ordinary surface reservoir in the mountains. When it is considered that products grown with Santa Ana River water reach a value of more than $80,000,000 annually, Mr. Cuttle says, it will be realised that this particular conservation job is well worth while.

The Poultry Yard

Are Yards Needed?

Direct Sunlight Seems to Be Principal Benefit

Do laying and breeding hens need runs out of doors? This is a question which Southern California poultrymen, especially those near Los Angeles, in the high-priced land area, find quite interesting. As more and more poultry ventures cease to be side issues and take on a high degree of specialization, and as land values keep on soaring, the yard question becomes more important, economically. Prof. J. E. Dougherty of the University of California at Davis has been studying the matter, and in a recent summation declared that direct exposure to sunlight seems to be the chief virtue of open air runs for chickens. Prof. Dougherty's report follows:

"Poultry products, like dairy products, are perishable and must be marketed frequently, expeditiously, and at low cost if the enterprise is to prove profitable. These areas, therefore, most favorably situated as regards good roads, railroad facilities, and proximity to good markets are most desirable.

"Rising land values necessitate a larger investment per acre on the part of those who embark in the poultry business from year to year. This increasing cost of land can be offset by the purchase of fewer acres. As the size of yards used for the fowls to run in will determine how many fowls can be kept on one acre, the use of no yards at all would permit of keeping the maximum number on each acre and so reduce the acreage required for the establishment of a poultry farm of any given number of birds.

"The open front house will permit a certain amount of direct sunlight to reach fowls that are continuously confined, but the results so far obtained in an investigation now under way at the University Farm would indicate that it will not admit enough to meet the optimum requirements of the birds in autumn, winter and early spring when the sun's rays are not so abundant or so strong as in midsummer.

"It has been urged in the past that the exercise obtained out-of-doors was more beneficial to birds than indoor exercise, even in a well ventilated, open front house. This belief is now being seriously questioned. Close students of the problem are beginning to look upon yards or range as being of value principally because of the more complete exposure to direct sunlight obtained by the birds in this way and, in the case of range, because of beneficial additions to the diet obtained by the stock in foraging over the land.

"If this be true, small yards should perhaps prove equally as satisfactory as large yards or free range in providing the benefits of sunlight. The difficulty, however, with small dirt yards it that they are very difficult to keep sanitary. It is a recognized fact, in the case of dirt yards, that as the yard space per bird decreases, the rapidity with which soil becomes contaminated with filth and disease germs increases. Yards less than fifty feet long and too narrow to turn a horse and plow in would have to be spaded as a means of cleansing the soil, if cultivated at all, and spading is costly as well as strenuous work.

"For these reasons concrete yards are being installed or seriously considered by poultry keepers who cannot give their stock free range but must keep them under warded conditions.

"The majority opinion among poultry keepers at present, however, seems to be that the yard should have the same area as the pen within the house, be laid with a good slope for rapid drainage, and have a very smooth surface which can be kept cleaner than a rough surface.

"Concrete yards can perhaps be used more in winter than dirt yards. The fowls can usually be allowed out in them right after a rain. On the other hand, in localities where the soil is heavy, birds using dirt yards might have to be confined and deprived of the full benefits of running out-of-doors during most of the winter and early spring. The soil would be too muddy between storms to let them run on it if the eggs were to be kept clean and the litter dry. In hot weather a concrete yard can be covered with litter and natural or artificial shade provided in order to make it cooler for the birds."

Is direct sunshine the chief benefit to be derived by a hen from an outdoor run? Is a yard of the same area as the pen within the house the proper thing? Here is a modern plant with small yards in Southern California. It is the C. E. Moyer place at Riverside.

He Likes Variety

And He Seems to Have It in His "Barnyard"

One of the most unique ranches that one may encounter in many a day's journey is known as the Barnyard, at the corner of Riverside-Redondo Boulevard and Western avenue, Moneta. The proprietor is R. G. Hutchison, a war veteran, who still carries a piece of shell in his left lung, an unpleasant memento of the Argonne.

Mr. Hutchison keeps about 1000 chickens on his ten-acre ranch, and these include Brahmas, Black Leghorns, Anconas, Silkies, "Rocks," "Reds," bantams, guinea fowl and about 500 pigeons, mainly tumblers and fantails. Mr. Hutchison also has about 100 ducks, turkeys and geese, seven goats, and approximately 600 rabbits of different breeds. He has time to look after a small kennel of pedigreed dogs, ranging from fox terriers to pit and Boston bulls, and friendly collies. Pigs of all sizes grunt contentedly in the Barnyard. There are black ones, white ones, red ones and spotted ones. And they and the fowls seem to be on most intimate terms.

Mr. Hutchison thoroughly enjoys his ranch work and is constantly adding to his variety of live stock and marketing his surplus.

Uncle Ab says don't be content to chew the cud of thought; bite off a few new ideas now and then.

Plan for New Year

Contests Send Announcements of Rules and Regulations

Rules, regulations, and application blanks for next season's egg-laying contests are now generally available upon application to the contest managers. Among the interesting announcements is that of Lloyd P. Sharp, manager of the Selma contest, who includes a form letter setting forth some of the advantages his particular contest offers. He says:

"Those selected pullets which you are growing out to enter the egg-laying contest this fall deserve the same splendid care and management after they enter the contetst that you have been able as a breeder to give them. It is for this reason that you should plan to enter a pen at Selma October 1. Selma has for four years ranked among the leading contests of the nation in average production. This is because of the careful attention given the birds, the method of feeding and management practiced, and the comfortable housing facilities which we have for the birds."

Remodel Rabbitry

Inglewood Couple Sell Off All Stock—to Start Again

INGLEWOOD.—After keeping rabbits for some time, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Stevenson of 531 West Manchester Avenue are selling out all their stock—not because they are tired of the business, but in order to remodel their place, begin afresh with the best stock they can buy, and build up a modern rabbitry.

Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson came to Inglewood from Los Angeles, having acquired a good lot on one of the main thoroughfares. They bought some rabbits and built up their stock to thirty breeding does of the White Flemish variety. Their objective at first was meat and fur, but as they progressed they began to be interested in the production of fine stock, and having decided that their expansion was limited by housing and other conditions, they decided to dispose of what stock they had, entirely remodel their place, and start as breeders.

George England of Inglewood is having another good year at the egg-laying contests, he reports. At Pomona his pen is in second place for total number of eggs and value of eggs. At Selma he has third place on points, the pen being the only one in the first ten to have more points than eggs, the total being 1481.25. At Michigan, a 100-pen competition, his pen is in fifth place, with more points than eggs. At the Texas contest, the England birds are leading by a handsome margin of points, with four of the ten high hens, and 1627.75 points, more points than eggs. Thus he has three pens with more points than eggs, in other words, with an average weight per egg of better than two ounces.

Bad Year for Culls

Important Activity Still More Vital When Prices Low

By L. D. Sanborn
Assistant Farm Adviser, Los Angeles County

I BELIEVE that inteligent culling of poultry flocks is essential every year, but more important this year because present indications are that poultrymen will receive a lower total price for their product during 1930 than they received in 1929.

The annual average price of eggs at San Francisco in 1929 was the highest since 1925, and about 10 per cent higher than in 1928. The high prices in 1925 greatly stimulated the expansion of egg production, and as a result of that expansion, prices declined steadily from 1925 to 1927. The unprofitable prices in 1927 resulted in a substantial reduction in the number of birds in laying flocks in 1928 and also there were 10 per cent fewer pullets raised. This resulted in even fewer birds in laying flocks during 1929, and accounted for the good prices received last year.

The industry is now in a position similar to that of 1925. There are about 5 per cent more chickens on farms this year, and this, together with the higher proportion of pullets and young hens in the laying flocks, indicates a volume of egg production in 1930 greater than in 1929.

All indications point to a surplus of chicks in 1930 and an increase of layers for 1931. Sales reports from 493 hatcheries throughout the United States show an increase of 24.7 per cent in chicks for January, 1930, as compared with the same month last year. The February report from 835 hatcheries with a capacity of over 10,000 chicks, shows an increase of 41.7 per cent of salable chicks hatched as compared with 1929. These figures justify the recommendation that laying flocks should be culled heavily during 1930.

Cold storage holdings of dressed poultry are above average this year also. The five-year average for holdings on March 1 was 109,601,000 pounds. There were 133,138,000 pounds in the refrigerators March 1, 1930, as compared with 89,088,000 pounds on the same date last year. These figures would seem to indicate lower prices for cull hens and justify early culling before the markets are flooded with culls.

With the probability of receiving lower prices for his product, the poultryman must cut down expenses and remove all leaks from his business if he intends to make the same net profit this year as last. With this in mind, I would like to recommend earlier and heavier culling of poultry flocks as one means of cutting down the leaks. If poultrymen will remove the "star boarders"—those birds that do not pay for their keep—they can lower the feed cost and thus the remaining poultry will return a larger net profit.

Culling, in the broad sense, as practiced by poultrymen, refers to the sorting of the desirable and undesirable hatching eggs, chicks, pullets, cockerels, hens, or breeding males. The greatest emphasis, however, has been placed on the sorting of hens, not only to eliminate the nonlayers, but also to determine when and how long the remainder have been laying. No pretense of forecasting future production is made, except in so far as it

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF AGRICULTURAL ACTIVITIES IN THE SOUTHWEST

Porterville Although shipments of Valencias this spring through the California Fruit Growers' Exchange were almost 200,000 boxes less than last year's shipments, financial returns to growers will be about the same, according to W. E. Sprott, secretary-manager of the Tulare county exchange. The reason for this is that Valencias this year brought nearly twice as much as those of last year. Last year the exchange shipped a total of 346,230 boxes of Valencias. This year, due to the severe winter, only 155,366 boxes were marketed, or 190,864 less than last year. The money received for the crop was only $106,961 less than was received for the previous year. As cost of picking, packing and marketing was considerably less for the short crop, actual net to the grower would be about the same on this crop which was only 45 per cent as large as that of last year.

Linden and Sartou will ship about 300 cars of fruit this season, an increase of 150 per cent over last year's business. They are now shipping plums and apricots and will have twenty-five cars of these. They will also ship 150 cars of grapes, twenty-five cars of pomegranates and 100 cars of honeydew melons. Prices on Beauty plums have been very good this season, averaging better than $100 per ton to the grower, according to Leon Linden. Prices for other varieties will be good also.

Upon recommendation of E. W. Everett of Fresno, Federal and State inspector for agricultural work in high schools, an additional agricultural instructor will be employed for part-time work in Porterville Union High School next term. This action was taken as a result of increased enrollment in the agricultural department. Ray M. Hale of Exeter has been secured for the post.

Mentone The overhead system of irrigating orange groves has found favor in the younger group of orange growers of this district who are doing most of the planting of groves at this time. The heaviest planting of orange groves in San Bernardino Valley recently has been in the Mentone section, and in practically every case overhead sprinklers have been installed. It was started when one of the companies planted fifty acres north of Mentone; another followed up with another planting, and still others set out groves of oranges and grapefruit and overhead sprinkling systems were installed in each case. Wells were sunk on the highest ground and gravity forces the water to the top of the pipes and through the nozzles. The systems are so arranged that, as the trees grow, the pipes can be extended, but this will not be necessary until the trees are 10 years old.

Strathmore Valencia orange growers of the Porterville-Strathmore district are reaping a rich harvest this season, according to C. H. Doyle, field man for several local packinghouses. Some of the growers have only a 50 per cent crop, but recent returns ranged from $8.55 to $9.25 per box to the grower, or 9 to 10 cents per pound for the oranges.

Westmoreland This has been a banner year for the boys of the Westmoreland grammar school in their vegetable garden. They were fortunate in having a supply of very fine early tomatoes and received $200 from those sold to shipping companies, not counting the other products sold at improvised stands along the highway. Other products of the garden include corn, cucumbers, and cantaloupes at this time of year. After shipping charges are paid, each boy will have made about $11 on his individual venture. The school gardens are on lots that otherwise would have been vacant. The boys are getting a first-hand knowledge of agriculture, keep books on the deal as part of their arithmetic, and have plenty of fresh vegetables to take home, besides. The schoolgirls are growing flowers, and while they have not brought as great financial returns as the vegetables they have added greatly to the appearance of the lots.

The big harvesters are at work in Imperial Valley's wide grain fields.

Calexico Grain harvest is on in earnest in and about Calexico. Most of this grain is sold through the Imperial Valley Grain Growers' Association located at Brawley. Wheat prices have been quite satisfactory to local men, who are selling most of it above eastern quotations. Much of the barley is stored.

San Diego Three sites in San Diego county have been selected by the State Park Commission for development into State parks, and a bond issue measure is to be placed on the August election ballots. One of the sites is the Silver Strand and Coronado Heights section; another is the Borego palms canyon area and the third is a wooded area on Palomar Mountain. A fourth may be added to the list later, possibly one of the estuary beaches in the northern part of the county.

Tulare Another drop for the monthly dairy pay roll in this section was seen for the month of May. Checks issued for the period totaled $307,673.21, as compared to $330,849.06 for April, and $344,193.84 for March. The fall here has corresponded closely to the slump in Los Angeles butter prices, which were 10 cents below normal the middle of June.

Pomona A large group of growers recently spent a day in San Gabriel Valley on a soil management tour. The trip started from the Raymond Carroll orchard at North Pomona. W. R. Schoonover, extension service specialist in citriculture, recited fundamentals of orchard soil tillage and brought out the fact that tillage is now considered by the State university to be useful as a weed eliminator rather than as a mulch maker. Reduction of plow sole, and better penetration of moisture, were two other topics of the day. The citrus growers' department of Los Angeles county Farm Bureau sponsored the tour.

Glendale Eucalyptus trees believed to be the oldest in America and the first to have come into this country from Australia are fighting a losing battle here against the march of the city. Sidewalks, pavements and other street improvements have made the accessibility of water to the roots of the trees so difficult that it appears only a matter of a few years before the last remaining dozen of an estimated 100 will have died, according to O. J. Renfrew, superintendent of the park and recreation department. Nevertheless Mr. Renfrew is making a determined effort to prolong the lives of those remaining by trimming their height as much as possible and cutting branches so as to reduce the amount of water needed.

The trees once lined the walks of Lomita avenue on both the east and west side of Brand Boulevard, having been planted about twenty-five feet apart some time in 1870, in what was then known as the Crow ranch, later sold to H. C. Goodell and subsequently subdivided. Last year several of them have had to be cut down and at present thirteen or fourteen of them still "carry on."

Calipatria Fire, apparently of incendiary origin, was started in the 240 acres of ripe barley farmed by J. W. Corn, north of here. Fortunately the land was divided into three separate 80's and the fire was confined to one of them by the high ditch banks. Evidence showed that the "fire bug" had attempted to start flames in fifty places throughout the entire tract. No motive is known for the act. The grain was insured.

To L. L. Lyerly goes the distinction of shipping the first carload of watermelons from Calipatria this year.

Eighteen carloads of lambs and fat ewes were shipped from here recently to Kansas City. They were scheduled for a fast trip, being taken to Brawley and there attached to one of the fast cantaloupe trains headed east.

Westmoreland grammar school boys sell tomatoes, corn and cantaloupes which they have grown on vacant lots, from the roadside.

Visalia Field crop test plots conducted by the Agricultural Extension Service in Tulare county show Romona and White Federation making the best progress under the dry conditions, according to Neil C. Derrick, in charge of the field crop work. In the Ducor section, lack of rain prevented the maturing of several plots but better results were obtained at Orange Cove. Vaughn and Club Mariout barley show somewhat in the lead. No definite recommendation can be made, however, on one year's trial. Ladino clover seems slower to start than alfalfa but when a stand is obtained, it appears to thicken up of itself. Superphosphate-treated alfalfa plots are showing up fairly well.

The grain harvest was in full swing in eastern Tulare county by the middle of June. The largest grain area is south of Porterville, although some grain is grown in the Zante district. While the yield will be rather light this year, the quality is high. Prospects were most favorable early in the season for a bumper crop, but several dry weeks came and late rains were delayed until after heading of the grain.

Tucson (Ariz.) The University of Arizona has probably as great an interest in the success of farming and forestry in this State as any similar institution anywhere. It has lands, including campus and farms scattered through the State. In Pima county the university campus and its two experimental farms comprise more than 400 acres of land. Besides the two local farms, it has an experimental farm at Tempe and a date garden, said to be second only to the government's garden at Indio. It has another large experimental farm at Yuma.

Besides the lands used for actual educational purposes, more than 600,000 acres of public lands have been allotted to the university. Most of this land is in timber in the northern part of the State. Timber lands are leased out to private individuals by the State treasurer. The income from these leases is placed in a fund by the treasurer and bonds bought with it. The interest from these bonds, which amounts to from $30,000 to $50,000 each year, belongs to the university.

Plans of the present university administration are said to call for a greatly increased effort along the lines of the agricultural school extension work.

Dinuba The first full carload of Mission and Kadota figs left Dinuba for the New York City markets on June 14. This car was shipped by the California Fruit Exchange, which is operating the precooling plant of the Dinuba Packing Association this season. Among growers who had fruit in the first carload shipment were Frank Rice, Earl Hunter, Fred Hobson, Ben Tout, Lee Bowers and J. N. Walling.

The first Black Mission figs were shipped by express from Exeter the first week of June and shipments were being made almost daily to various markets by the middle of the month.

Redlands The street shade trees are among the greatest assets Redlands, and other California cities have, in the opinion of many lovers of beauty. An interesting experiment is to be carried out in Redlands during the coming year. The power company has let a contract to a firm of tree surgeons to trim street trees in order to clear the electric lines of branches. This is to be done to avoid the criticism that the electric and telephone company crews butcher the shade trees because they do not know how to retain their beauty and yet not interfere with the lines.

Exeter Eleven cars of Beauty plums were shipped from Exeter the last week of May, according to A. A. Tuttle, horticultural inspector for this district. The fruit was shipped by the Mayflower Fruit Association, Rocky Hill Corporation and the American Fruit Company. The Mayflower Association also shipped one car for export. Other houses started packing early in June.

Small Farm Home Ideal Place to Bring Up the Kiddies

"CHILDREN as well as chickens need free range to develop their little bones and muscles so that they may become strong and vigorous," says Mrs. Louise B. Gardner of 58 West Palm Drive, Arcadia, in telling why the Gardner families chooses to live on a small farm home away from the crowded conditions of the city. This statement echoes the innermost thoughts of many other suburban dwellers who have found happiness in cultivating little farms.

In fact, the judges in the Farm and Garden Magazine-Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce Small Farm Home Contest discover that very often parents have moved from the city to a country place with the sole idea of being able to bring up their youngsters in the healthful and wholesome life the country alone affords. This was distinctly the idea of Mr. and Mrs. Gardner with their family of five. But the Gardners have also found profit of another sort in their venture as is explained in the following letter, written as a condition of entry in the contest:

Profitable, Too

"The advantages in personal satisfaction and better living," says Mrs. Gardner, "cannot be equaled outside of the small farm home, especially for those who enjoy the quiet and simplicity of simple home life. And if managed with care and intelligence, it is surprising how profitable one small acre can be.

"On our one acre we have six kinds of fruits, berries and nuts which contribute largely to our table. During the winter months, when vegetables are scarce in our garden we can go to our cupboard in the little cellar under the house and find there rows of canned fruits and vegetables—all products of our own place. There are even certain vegetables that may be had the year 'round from our garden.

"Of course our chickens are our main source of income. We have 1200 fine White Leghorn hens, all laying, and manage to raise 1000 baby chicks each year. This is about as many as we can care for.

"Mr. Gardner would not consider employment away from home, because he has found that the one acre pays better than a great many positions offer. Of course one must be adept at working for himself and enjoy the work to be prosperous. Mr. Gardner thinks that there is more satisfaction in working for himself than in working for the other fellow.

"We spend our entire time on the acre and often find the days scarcely long enough to take care of the many details we have planned. The chickens take up the greater part of the day, but there are always a few moments when we can improve the home and grounds.

"When we purchased our place we thought that the house was very attractive, but that the surroundings were not in harmony with it. But it was a newly built place and we found it easy to make improvements. We had the ground all plowed, rolled and smoothed and then laid out pretty green lawns and spaces for flowers and vegetables. One section was set aside to furnish green feed for the poultry. From time to time we add a few fruit trees or some shrubs and flowers. There seems to be no end to these added touches; and there's so much enjoyment in making them—just as much as there is in enjoying the benefits afterward.

"We find that the most essential tools are those familiar to everyone. Among these are the regular garden hoe, rake, shovel, spade, hand plow and cultivator. A wheelbarrow, small pruning tools, such as hedge-shears and snips, a hand spraying machine, a lawn mower and plenty of pails for carrying green food, eggs, water and so forth, are very useful, too."

The Gardners' pretty home has a nice green lawn and beautiful trees. It must be seen to be appreciated, but the reader can imagine from this statement by the pleasant woman who presides over the household that their happy family enjoys country life out in the fresh air and sunshine.

City Conveniences

On a still smaller space of ground just outside the city of Pasadena, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Dyce enjoy the profits from their chickens and fruit while having all the conveniences of the city. The Dyce family lives at 3776 Mountain View avenue, Michillinda. Mr. Dyce wrote the following letter to the manager of the small farm home contest:

"We chose our home here because the independent living offered us such freedom in occupation and enjoyment. Almost any time of the year that I want to break away for a short time I can arrange to do so, and I never need to feel that the stock maneuvers upon Wall street will leave only the taste of yesterday's dinner in my mouth.

"The idea we had when we purchased our unimproved half acre was to have a home with house and garden in accord with our plans and desires. As yet it is not entirely complete; our poultry plant will be expanded until it will care for more stock and the returns are sufficient to meet all our expenses and a profit besides. Still, the past year was a successful one financially.

"We are so situated that we are able to sell most of our eggs and poultry at the home farm. In addition to a nice flock of chickens, we raise twenty-five to thirty turkeys for the holiday market. We find a ready sale for them and realize a fat profit.

"The eggs and poultry help a lot in providing for our home table, too, and the fruit trees are beginning to be a considerable source of food as they come into bearing. They are in fine shape and growing rapidly. One old grape vine was on the half-acre when we bought it. Last year it produced over 300 pounds of fruit, some of which was made into juice and jelly.

"I spend about two hours each day in caring for the place and the chickens, but find it necessary to work an additional two or three hours each week upon "clean-up" day. Of course there is more time needed from time to time in making the improvements necessary to our growing place."

The Lima Acreage

The field department of the California Lima Bean Growers' Association has completed its acreage check-up on both regular and baby limas planted. Ventura county is far ahead of all the others in regular limas, with 35,210 irrigated and 16,701 nonirrigated acres. Orange county has 20,688 nonirrigated and 6317 irrigated acres devoted to this crop, and the rest of the State makes up a total of 57,683 irrigated and 36,955 nonirrigated acres. In baby limas, Los Angeles county stands first, with 10,250 acres, the Tracy-Patterson district being second with 10,150 acres. Baby limas are estimated to be growing on 43,900 acres in California.

The acreage for regular limas is very close to that of last year, the difference being but 229 acres in the whole State. The total area planted to baby limas, however, has increased over last year by 6800 acres, the gain being confined to Central California and Lompoc districts.

The stand of plants generally is reported to be good, and the moisture content in the ground, particularly in Orange and San Diego counties, is better than it was at this time in 1929. Because of replanting after cold, unfavorable weather, some of the crop will mature later than usually.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF AGRICULTURAL ACTIVITIES IN THE SOUTHWEST

A "Topsy" Dairy

IT "JUST GROWED" FROM ONE JERSEY COW

By Mabel L. Edmiston

TO HAVE raised a family, to have done well all the things that fall to the lot of a mother and homemaker, to have taken up and proved up on a government claim, to have been self-supporting for the last thirty years would seem a full enough life for most women. Add to this the building of an unusually fine dairy, beginning with one cow, and you have another achievement of Mrs. Margaret Worsham, who owns and, with the aid of a manager, operates the Worsham Dairy, at Whittier.

In 1886, when California was still young, Mrs. Worsham took up a government claim on the extreme east side of what is now Whittier and in the cool shadows of a clump of pepper trees she built a little home. Along with other things, she was confronted with the problem of getting fresh milk. The only thing to do was to buy a cow. Little beginnings sometimes have big endings, and the purchase of one Jersey cow was the start of a successful business enterprise.

As her family was small, the cow gave more milk than she could use. And the neighbors, not as numerous then as they are today, heard about the exceptionally good milk Mrs. Worsham's cow gave and began coming to the back door for an occasional quart.

An energetic, far-seeing little lad with an eye for business, and who lived near by, rather timidly, one day, inquired of Mrs. Worsham if he might carry the milk to the neighbors. They agreed as to terms and in this small way her first active route, began. Today the Worsham dairy serves nearly 600 families, and some of the people who used to come to the back door for their milk are still customers.

Finally it became necessary for Mrs. Worsham to make her own livelihood. She realized that the dairy business seemed to be the most promising. But it would have to be expanded. Ten acres of land were bought on what is now Lexington Road, north of Pico. More cows were bought, until now, under the management of H. E. Haines, Mrs. Worsham maintains a modern up-to-date dairy.

The Worsham dairy produces two grades of milk. A string of fine Guernseys and Jerseys supply guaranteed milk, while a herd of good Holsteins supply Grade A milk.

The establishment has an honor certificate from the National Dairy Association, stating that the herd of fifty-five cows has had the creditable average of 366.8 pounds of butter fat in a year.

The watering trough for the herd is a large cement affair. The water is supplied by deep wells.

The milking begins at 2 in the afternoon and usually requires two hours. It is done in a sanitary milking barn by milkers. The bottling is done by an automatic machine. Next the bottles are placed in milk crates and on into the refrigeration room to await delivery.

In January of this year, Mrs. Worsham sold her route to the Pellissier Dairy Farms, contracting with them to take her entire output. In speaking of her work, covering a lifetime, Mrs. Worsham said:

"It has taken courage and the ability to stick to it. In fact, I've been accused of carrying the load of half a dozen men. The point is I still have my dairy."

The neat milking barn at the Worsham Dairy, Whittier, where a busy woman built up a paying business, starting with just one cow.

An Experiment Still

By B. A. Hazeldon

TWO and a half years ago, Morris Brothers came from Colorado to Southern California, resolved on making the Southland their home. They hadn't any definite idea what they were going to do, except that they were interested in farm life, liked the open and had had some experience in making the soil work for them.

Opportunity sometimes decides these things for people and it was so in this case. They found a going dairy for sale at 656 One Hunderd and Fifty-seventh street in Gardena, and although they had had no experience in milking cows and disposing of the milk, it looked good to them. After thinking it over, they concluded that it was worth trying, so they bought it and started out to be dairymen.

This was just about a year ago. W. E. Morris says that so far as he and his brother are concerned, the dairy business is still an experiment, but they appear to be satisfied with the job and feel that the future is promising. Dairying is a necessity and this particular dairy seems to fit into the scheme of things very well.

They have only four acres of land, which seems a small plot for the fifty-one cows, but they are conducting an intensive business. Most of the cows are Holsteins and Jerseys and the product is sufficient in both quantity and quality. They employ only two men and these two milk all the cows. It takes them two and a half hours to milk the herd, and twice a day, at 4 in the morning and again at 4 in the afternoon, they begin their work.

Morris Brothers have equipment for cooling and bottling but do not retail at all, selling it wholesale to a Long Beach firm which attends to the delivery. At present the herd provides about 100 gallons of milk a day. The calves are vealed, and replacements are bought, as they have no room for raising their own heifers.

It takes a lot of alfalfa for the cows and as there is no room on so small a place to grow it, it is brought by truck from Lancaster in Antelope Valley. They feed the hay after milking only. The grain ration is fed at milking time.

A scene on Morris Brothers' ranch at Gardena, where a year's trial has encouraged them to keep on dairying.

Bovine Triplets

They Are Just About as Common With Cows as With Humans

Newspapers always herald the fact whenever an overworked stork lugs in three babies at once to some human home. Triplets are rare but not unknown in the bovine family, either, and when they appear they deserve some attention, too.

Perhaps it is due to California sunshine, or the soil or the climate that two Southland cows have recently given birth to triplets. A 5-year-old Holstein cow, regular member in good standing in the dairy herd of H. and E. Lautenbach, East Center avenue, Bellflower, did her best to help out the cow census enumerator with three babies at a time. At last reports, all three calves were alive and healthy. A later item which came from Orange county is to the effect that a cow belonging to Segerstrom Brothers at Greenville had recently given birth to triplets also.

A number of years ago, an official of the dairy division, United States Department of Agriculture, began a study of dairy cattle breeding with an idea of increasing the number of calves dropped. No reports have been made as to the progress index in that direction, however.

Here's Mamma Holstein and her three babies, all the same age and all husky. E. Lautenbach, one of the owners, a dairyman of Bellflower, is giving the new family the once-over.

It's Getting Better

By Raymond Ellis

Farm Adviser, Santa Barbara County

REAL progress is being made at Rosemary Farm, Santa Maria, in the building up of a great herd of pure-bred Holstein cattle. The success of the last year's show string on the circuit and the naming of one young Rosemary bull as all-American champion indicate the quality of the type produced on the farm, and at the close of the fourth year of the farm herd's cow-testing association work in the county, a Rosemary cow was the highest producer, not only for last year but for the entire period of testing in the county, which was commenced some ten years ago. During the year from May 1, 1929, to April 30, 1930, this cow produced 23,623 pounds of milk with a butter-fat content of 827.9 pounds.

This herd of Holstein-Friesian cattle, owned by Capt. G. Allan Hancock of Los Angeles, was assembled for him by his farm superintendent, D. T. Batchelder. It took him four or five years to gather the animals, and now he feels that for the first time they are beginning to live up to the expectations which the owner had, from the standpoint of herd production. Last year an average of 160 head were milked and the average production was 269.6 pounds of fat per cow. This year, with 123 cows on test, the production has been lifted to 302.8 pounds of butter fat.

This gain in production has been brought about chiefly by the replacement method. Careful culling has been done and good producing young heifers are taking the places of the cows that do not measure up to the standard. During the past eighteen months, forty-one head of low producers have been culled out and the heifers selected to "fill their shoes" are raised on the place from the best producing cows.

Rosemary herd has, of course, been tested regularly for bovine tuberculosis ever since its foundation. It is also one of the few herds in Santa Barbara county which has been tested for abortion as well. All animals which have shown positive reactions after either of these tests have been promptly segregated from the rest and these are being replaced as rapidly as possible with clean animals, so that the herd is a clean one today and will be kept that way.

Of course, good breeding, good housing and the most careful attention to feeding make up a part of the improvement program which is being carried along on Rosemary Ranch. With such a program, the results the management and Capt. Hancock desire are bound to come.

Gladiolus Show

ceiving the bluish lavender varieties and the bluish pinks, which is as near as they've come, with a great deal of interest. Some of them are particularly lovely. Among the best offered are Heavenly Blue, Mrs. Von Konyenenburg, Mary Frey, Veilschenblau and Minuet, with a special consideration for Phitzer's newest introduction—Blue Triumphator, a variety of great size, about the same shade as Heavenly Blue.

The best general display was entered by the Briggs Floral Company, Encinitas, winning the fine silver trophy cup given by the Miller Floral Company, the design and actual workmanship of the trophy being that of Mr. Miller himself, which makes the award all the more interesting. The Frank Marrin Company of Santa Monica won second in this class.

The most artistically arranged exhibit was that of Frank Marrin Company, winning the cup offered by the Rust Nurseries. Frank Marrin was manager of the show this year, yet he found time to make entries that took a number of honors. Incidentally, a second which ran Mr. Marrin a close race for first, was the display of Clifford Moore, president of the society for the past year.

No awards were made in the classes for the best collection of gladioli, either exhibition or primulinus types, this year. In the open to all competitors, first prize went to the Briggs Floral Company for the best new seedling in both exhibition and primulinus types, as well as the best seedling, disseminated, of California origination, the variety in this case being Mrs. Briggs's lovely Mayflower, a ruffy white, generously flushed with delicate pink, like the blossom for which it was named.

The best basket of any pink variety, which carried the Frank J. McCoy cup to the winner, was entered by P. A. Renton, Jr., Los Angeles, who used Balboa, a beautiful variety of the primulinus grandiflora type. The best basket of lavender or violet varieties was exhibited by the Santa Maria Bulb Gardens, the crispy Mrs. Von Konyenenburg being used. The Briggs's huge basket of Carl Salbach's charming Helen Wills won first in the white class.

Among the best baskets of primulinus type, Orange Queen captured first in the orange class for P. A. Renton, Jr., this variety being much in evidence in many other displays. It has certainly captured the public fancy.

In the artistic arrangement class, the best of pink variety was entered by San Vicente Gardens, Santa Monica; the best in orange class, by White Floral Gardens; San Bernardino. San Vicente also had the best basket of lavender varieties, and also of purple varieties. Mr. Marrin exhibited the most artistic basket of mixed colors, with San Vicente and Clifford Moore coming close after for second and third. Dr. Sprague of Rancho Santa Fe took first for the best basket of lasciniated types with Yellow Orchid, a new introduction, identical with his well-known Orchid, except for the color. N. C. Pedley, Pomona, took first award for the most artistic vase of twelve spikes.

The best single spike of any pink variety, exhibition type, was judged to be Mrs. Briggs's Winged Victory. N. C. Pedley had the best red spike, a Phitzer's Triumph. Mr. Renton had a spike of Orange Queen which took first in its class. K. Waters, Los Angeles, won in the yellow class with Golden Measure. N. S. Pedley's spike of Mrs. Von Konyenenburg took first in the lavender class and Briggs's Charles Dickens won premier honors in the purple class. In the white class, a spike of Phitzer's huge Albatross took first, displayed by Briggs. In the "any other class," Clifford Moore's entry, Heavenly Blue, took first and the Briggs' entry, Hinamoa, second. The latter is a very odd and striking variety of Australian origination. In the primulinus class, K. Waters won in the pink group with a spike of Los Angeles. J. W. Nelson won in the red class with Flaming Sword. In the orange class, Briggs's entry Gloriana, took first, this variety being a very lovely one of recent introduction.

Sharing interest for many visitors with the "main event," the display of new sweet peas at the recent gladiolus show in Los Angeles gave a glimpse of new delights in store for us in this ever-popular flower. Fred C. McNabb, who brought the display from Salinas, is shown here with a bowl of Duplex Gem, a pea that is very large and ruffled.

The best collection of gladioli, lasciniated types, was entered by the Briggs Floral Company, with Dr. Sprague running second.

The most artistic basket in the show, regardless of class, was an entry by San Vicente Gardens, which won for them a trophy given by L. G. Rowe, of Seabrook, N. H., Mr. Rowe being supervisor of judges this year.

The best general display in the amateur class was that of F. R. La Follette. Awards in this class are not available and are incomplete in the other groups, as the list failed to arrive at this office in time.

A very effective display of beautiful gladioli was shown by the Germain Seed and Plant Company, receiving a special award, I understand, although it was not entered in competition in any way. Another splendid complimentary display was that of the Aggeler-Musser Seed Company.

Practically all the leading florists in the city were represented by elaborate basket arrangements, of gladioli entirely, or these flowers combined with others. There have never been as many such displays at previous shows. The co-operation of the florists made a great deal of difference, for their entries helped fill the foyer with beauty.

Vying with the gladiolus array in the foyer were some marvelous sweet peas brought down for the event from the sweet pea show at Salinas by Fred C. McNabb. The peas were extraordinarily large, very ruffled and had remarkably long, strong stems. There were several new shades among them.

The judges for the event this year were; Louis G. Rowe, New Hampshire; J. D. Long, Boulder, Colo.; W. H. Kingsley, Hayward; John Morley, San Diego; Arthur Howard, Montebello; Fred C. McNabb, Los Angeles, and Mrs. S. S. Ashenbrenner, Covina.

Carl Salbach of Berkeley, second vice-president of the society, brought down a complimentary display of his gladioli from the north. One of the most exquisite things he showed was his Helen Jacobs. I don't know just how Mr. Salbach describes it officially, but I should call it a peach shade, with a flush of rose. It has form and many other qualities that make it a most attractive thing.

At the annual meeting to choose a president for the coming year, always held the afternoon of the first show day, Fred C. McNabb was elected.

License Fees Due

Florist and nursery license fees to insure safety of garden flowers and shrubs from damaging pests and diseases will be due in California, July 1. The license fee is $10 to include the first acre, to which is added 50 cents per acre, not to exceed $50 in any one case. The fee is required of all persons who ship or sell plants which are platted, potted, ornamental or decorative, or any other nursery plants, plant products, shrubs, bulbs, vines or trees. No license is required for cut flowers since only rooted stock is affected by this license provision. Last year's registered licenses numbered approximately 2250. Funds derived from this registration are used by the nursery service of the State Department of Agriculture to carry on pest control in places where such stock is grown or sold and to perform various other functions as requested by agricultural commissioners and nurserymen.

Beet Work Progresses

While the strain of sugar beets, known as P19, developed at Davis by the University of California, has shown marked resistance to curly top disease, it is of no commercial value, so cross-breeding with a good commercial variety has been started, it is reported by Katherine Esau, botanist.

Hobby Bested Them

So They Changed It to the Business of Palm Growing

By Dorothy L. Black

From the lure of the exotic beauty of subtropical plants, Alex Crawford and his father W. O. Crawford, developed a hobby that quite ran away with them. Camellias with their symmetrical pink, white, red and variegated blossoms, fragrant gardenias, that striking "bird of paradise" flower, the strelitzia, and a most unusual newcomer from South Africa, Doryanthes, or "flame plant," that is somewhat similar to a yucca in habit, but with tall flower stalks of flaming crimson—all interested them. But above all, palms intrigued the Crawfords—from the very planting of the hard seeds that sleep soundly from six to eighteen months before sending their stiff little green spears through the sand and then take at least four years to make any real effort toward becoming trees.

Deciding to turn their hobby into a business, the Crawfords looked around to find just the place to develop their patience and the growing plants. Eventually they chose San Fernando Valley, near Van Nuys, as offering the conditions, climate and all for their purpose. Last May the first lath house, 440x130, was built for the field plants, and a smaller one was erected for potted plants. Another, largest of all, will soon be under way.

In time, when their plants have attained marketable size, they expect to build a display house on the Ventura Boulevard corner, of their property where the feathery grace of the palms, the beauty of the colorful and unusual blossoming plants, will signal to the passer-by.

Tile Drain Goes In

A Thousand Acres to Be Treated by Calipatria Ranchers

CALIPATRIA.—With drainage tile laid in 420 acres of citrus orchard planted by the Bastanchury Farms and in 240 acres of Fleet and Fleming pea lands, an extensive drainage improvement program is being started by the fruit and vegetable growers in the territory lying east of this city. The Balfour Guthrie Company expects to tile-drain eighty acres, and L. L. Lyerly plans similar operations to cover 160 acres he recently purchased. Mrs. Adelle Lingo is reported to be about ready to tile her forty-acre grapefruit orchard. In all, about 1000 acres here are to be drained by tile.

L. E. Sinclair states that his 160-acre ranch in which tile was laid last summer, produced forty tons more of peas than he harvested from the land in 1929, and he figured that at an average price of 7 cents a pound, the additional tonnage brought him a gross return nearly double the cost of the tile installation. Whether his increased crop was due wholly to the drainage or not, there is little question in the minds of the growers as to its efficacy in improving the bulk of yields.

Transforming a Desert

ANTELOPE VALLEY IS GROWING TREES FOR ITS OWN EXCLUSIVE USE

Sixty years ago J. A. Montgomery, then twelve years old, planted a little pepper sapling at Rivera. Today both man and tree are living, and they posed together for Mr. Von Blon to take these pictures to illustrate his interesting story on this page. The inset shows the size of the tree when Mr. Montgomery planted the gnarled patriarch in 1870.

Living Witnesses

MAN AND TREE WATCH TIME'S CHANGES

By John L. Von Blon

SHOULD a clarion call ring out today from the sweltering East or the cyclonic Middle West for living testimonials to the efficacy of California climate, soil and sunshine for plant growth and human well-being, I could suggest no more graphic citation than a certain mammoth pepper tree and its energetic sponsor

The glistening green monarch is a landmark a mile north of Rivera and about the same distance southwest of Pico. Though but threescore years in existence, its trunk at an average man's height above the roots has a girth of twenty-four-feet—approximately eight feet in diameter—any of the main limbs would in itself constitute a tree of no mean size. It is fifty-five feet tall, with a "wing spread" of sixty-eight feet, or about 3700 square feet, and it is an easy matter, when horticultural picnics are held there, to seat 350 diners at tables in its inviting shadow.

This graceful giant was set out as a tiny eighteen-inch sapling in 1870, by J. A. Montgomery, then 12 years of age, and he has lived to see it assume majestic proportions and form, with a massive bole exceeding his stature by two and a half feet in thickness! The boy grew rapidly, too, but the pace was too fast for him and he lost the upward race within six months. Los Angeles at that time had a population slightly above 5000 and Mr. Montgomery watched this somnolent pueblo develop into a world metropolis of over a million and a quarter—and he is still watching it go ahead even faster than his tree.

Four years after the initial planting, the sturdy tree, already eight inches through at the base, had to be moved to make room for a large house which Mr. Montgomery's father was about to build and which still remains in the immediate vicinity. An Indian toiled one whole day to dig it up, and four mules had a heavy task drawing it to the new location; but its growth was in nowise checked.

The land was originally a part of the 3000-acre Rancho de Bartolo Viejo, the home place of Pio Pico, last Governor of California under the Mexican regime, the elder Montgomery acquiring a considerable tract of the remote grant for a sum so trifling that it would not now command an acre; and thus it transpired that the distinguished don on his friendly visits with the new settler frequently rested and chatted under the ever-expanding pepper, the best shade producer thereabouts, imparting to it a touch of the historic. It is happily recorded that the dignified executive who held final sway over Mexico's northernmost territory was a profound lover of all nature and of trees in particular. Though his grand hacienda has been cut into small parcels, the lovely old Pico adobe house is carefully preserved as one of the romantic treasures of the Southland's olden days.

If there be any person who can conceive as waste the space occupied by a tree, let me say for his benefit that it is not even theoretically so in this instance. Inclosed except for an entrance driveway by a neatly-kept privet hedge, the site is devoted to utilitarian purposes—trial grounds for a nursery—the glossy, fern-like, low-hanging foliage serving admirably as an airy "shed" wherein to temporarily store and handle flower bulbs protected from the sun. It is usual to see hundreds of thousands of narcissus, gladiolus, dahlia, iris and other bulbs there in open crates and trained crews grading, cleaning and otherwise preparing them for world commerce. So this symmetrical tower of marked beauty, in season resembling a coral pyramid in its vesture of rose-colored peppercorns, pays rent. It is an asset, as well as an ornament.

Mr. Montgomery, who disposed of the property to the nursery concern, is now one of Southern California's representative walnut and citrus growers and resides on Passons Boulevard near Rivera. Not having met him previously, I expected a feeble old man to meet me at the tree. Instead, he dashed up in a big Lincoln car, himself at the wheel, dapper and spry, and leaped out like a youth, appearing at least a dozen years less than his 72. As he told his story, passing air liners roared overhead in thunderous contrast with the quietude of the period discussed. One of seven children, he was born in the mining country on the Feather River and brought to Southern California in 1868, at the age of ten. His father, the late H. L. Montgomery, came around the Horn in '52 and his mother traveled in the first wagon train that fought its weary way coastward through the Indian and other hazards over the southern route, via Santa Fe, in '49. There wasn't even a cattle trail across New Mexico and Arizona, and it took the forty ox-teams nine months to drag their heavy loads to San Francisco.

When the family established itself on the ranch purchased from Pio Pico, entertainment was a rarity; but on infrequent holidays, notably Fourth of July, all would drive to the little town of Los Angeles in a hay-bedded wagon with a huge basket of lunch, and camp, eat and celebrate in a wide-open lot at the northwest corner of Second and Spring streets where the Bryson Building now stands. There were but four houses east of the river, on Boyle Heights, and in the nine or ten miles between that point and the Montgomery abode only one—occupied by a lone Mexican saddle-tree maker.

Of all the tremendous changes since wrought, revolutionary beyond dream or vision, Mr. Montgomery unhesitatingly declares the most astonishing to him is the development of water for the cultivation of vast acreages and the use of the millions of inhabitants as they flocked in. In his community, now veritably garden and orchard, the neighborly ranchers used to patrol the precarious irrigation ditches with loaded rifles to protect their crops in critical seasons, making sure that none appropriated more than his fair share of water.

Schinus molle, the Peruvian native that is our "pepper," was a very important factor in the earlier beautification of Southern California but is unfortunately passing out as a matter of necessity, being now quite generally condemned because it is subject to various kinds of scale. Clean, healthy specimens, like that for which Mr. Montgomery is responsible, are exceptional.

To Fight Scale

Dictyospermum, the fruit tree scale, loves avocadoes, but not as well as growers of that tree-grown salad, it appears. Approving the survey which the State Department of Agriculture has undertaken to determine the spread in California of this insect, the avocado industry is preparing to finance a campaign for its eradication. The survey was made possible by an emergency appropriation of $9300 approved by Gov. C. C. Young upon showing by a growers' committee that the scale, if unchecked, may seriously injpair California's new commercial fruit industry. The appropriation was made contingent upon a grower-financed eradication campaign following completion of the survey. The survey, which will be conducted in all avocado districts south of the Tehachapi, with the exception of Imperial county, is being organized under the supervision of Cyril Gammon, department entomologist. It should be completed within six months.

Outdoor "Flower Shows" Lie Along Coastline Free to All

NOW that the gladiolus show is over, we haven't much in the way of flower shows to look forward to until the dahlia exhibitions begin. That is, so far as arranged shows are concerned. At this particular time, however, the countryside about Southern and Central California is spread with another sort of floral display that we can enjoy if we will.

It is the season when the long smooth highways, north and south, all irresistibly lure us and, if we are not in too much of a hurry, we can see many sights of more than ordinary horticultural interest as we go. Dashing along in an effort to cover as much territory as possible is not traveling. After all, it isn't how far we have gone that counts; it is how much we have seen.

If you are going north, it isn't much farther to Santa Maria, for instance, to leave the Coast Highway at Buellton and go by way of Lompoc Valley, over a fine road with much less traffic on it. Upon reaching the town of Lompoc, a mile drive out of the direct route back to the Coast Highway will bring one into the center of the growing fields for John Bodger Company, Burpee, Zvolanek and other large companies which produce vast quantities of commercial flower seeds. If you cannot spot the blaze of color in the distance, so as to know which way to turn, an inquiry will promptly bring the information. The fields are not difficult to find and in the course of half an hour you can feast your eyes on beauty that you will not forget in a hurry.

At this particular time you will be able to see acres of larkspurs in solid blocks of a single color stretching over the country; you will see acres of cosmos, of poppies, of marigolds and calendulas, of salpiglossis and many, many other varieties of flowers. You will, very shortly, find the fields of the late varieties of sweet peas in full bloom, making broad bands of blue, of rose, of crimson, orange and white, and filling the air with exquisite fragrance.

Acres of spicy, brilliant-hued petunias grow through the vast plantings in Lompoc and Santa Maria Valley. The young ladies in this picture are hand-pollinating the blossoms, to insure a crop of true and productive seed.

Once you swing back onto the main highway that leads into Santa Maria, you will pass, before entering that town, a great field of gladioli in flower, the brilliant reds, the gay yellows, the luscious pink shades and the cooling lavender and purple tones of the blossoms set off by a background of green foliage. So much of the gladiolus production is centralized around the south coast district that we find this particular field coming as a sort of surprise party. It is that of the Santa Maria Bulb Gardens and worth a visit from anyone who loves the flower. They have a unique display room where each variety in bloom is shown to advantage, properly labeled, affording one a splendid opportunity of judging which ones ought to go into next year's plantings.

Santa Maria is comfortably reached in a day's drive, including the brief detours to see the fields of Lompoc Valley. As a matter of fact, it would be difficult to locate a more beautiful display of flowers than is to be found at Santa Maria Inn any day of the year. The floral decorations there have made it famous far and wide, and certainly it has spread the gospel of what California gardens can be made to yield in the way of flowers twelve months in the year, in a way that is highly practical. Many a woman has gone into that flower-filled dining-room and learned a lot of new points in flower arrangement. Daring color combinations, unusual containers and effects, all contribute to the education of those interested in such things—to say nothing of their pleasure.

Before leaving this valley (Santa Maria) a few minutes' run in the direction of the coast will bring one to the vast flower fields in the vicinity of Guadalupe where the Waller-Franklin and the MacDonald companies produce quantities of seeds from plantings that glow with color and perfume the countryside for miles around. The Waller-Franklin Company has several hundred acres over around Arroyo Grande and Oceano, too. Seeing one is not seeing all, for some localities are particularly suited to the growing of certain seeds and for that reason the plantings vary considerably.

Sweet peas are extensively grown around Salinas, chiefly by the Morse-Ferry Company, where a lovely sweet pea show is held every year and anyone would be repaid for visiting there. The early peas are over but the late ones will be coming along shortly.

It is hardly likely that anyone could pass through Watsonville without being attracted by the blaze of vivid color that comes from the extensive plantings of H. A. Hyde's tuberous begonias—that is, unless they made the trip through that section after dark.

Over on the Monterey peninsula there are a number of people who grow various flowers to a considerable extent, although none of the plantings is particularly large. Nevertheless, there is plenty of floral beauty along with other scenic attractions that this section can boast. And, so far as attractions specifically for garden enthusiasts, it would repay anyone to visit the municipal rose gardens at Monterey. Under the skillful handling of Mr. Lester, the garden, though small, contains much of particular interest to rosarians. In the collection are many varieties that are no longer in commercial distribution and which have, however, a great deal of historical significance in the development of the flower. In fact, it is possible to trace the parentage of some of our present-day favorites in this way and to see exactly from what sources they derived their form, their color, their perfume or other attributes. Indeed, some of the roses are those of rather re-

Gladiolus Show Excelled All Previous Ones in Artistic Beauty

ONE very ardent amateur gardener who has a pretty nice collection of gladioli came up to me at the recent gladiolus show and declared that he felt like going home, digging up everything he had, buying a lot of new varieties, reading everything he could get on the subject and then going at it again in an effort to grow flowers that looked like those on display at the show. Perhaps that is an extreme reaction but I fancy most of us felt like we'd have to freshen up our stock and make a little more effort in the way we grow our flowers.

Artistically, this show was the best the California Gladiolus Society has sponsored to date. It took the stilts out from under the displays and gave us a chance to look at something besides the containers and the undersides of the petals. Many of the exhibits were arranged as though growing in flower beds in a garden, especially in the center displays, giving a delightfully open effect to the exhibition as a whole. It did not seem to be the object to show as many spikes of blooms as could be crowded into a given space but, rather, to select the best ones and arrange them as beautifully as possible.

Weather conditions proved just right to throw a lot of finely colored, well-opened blossoms the exhibitors' way at the very time they were most needed. Other years the shows have perhaps attained a higher mark for outstanding introductions or novelties. For some reason, fewer of these were in evidence at this event, but in general quality this exhibit would be hard to surpass.

It does seem as though the primulinus grandiflora varieties are getting bigger in form every year. Some of the new ones are truly living up to their name. At the other extreme, there was a marked interest in the dainty, delicate introductions that show great refinement of form and will lend themselves most happily to table and other small types of decorations. Many of these were of lasciniated types. There were a number of the charming little miniature glads and quite a showing of the old "baby" gladioli.

As in previous years, the pastel colorings dominated, especially the tones of pink. Clear lavenders, and soft yellows are always in demand and some very lovely ones were shown. Of course, everyone is hoping some breeder will get a truly blue gladiolus, but in the meantime we are re-

Transforming a Desert

ANTELOPE VALLEY IS GROWING TREES FOR ITS OWN EXCLUSIVE USE

By F. H. Ernst
Assistant Farm Adviser, Los Angeles County

CALIFORNIA has many desert areas which are being developed as rapidly as possible into farms and homes. The greatest need they have in most instances is that of trees to provide them with shade and shelter. This State is following the lead of other States, particularly those of the East, in providing the farmers with small trees to be planted on their places, and in no section of the country is this co-operation needed more or more appreciated and welcomed than here. The plantings are sometimes in the form of a woodlot, sometimes a windbreak.

The United States Department of Agriculture is helping to make these trees available. A Federal law was passed recently which gives assistance in the propagation of nursery stock which is suitable for just such plantings. Such trees are intended solely for farm use, and so it is natural that the county agricultural agents and farm advisers throughout the United States are acting as the tree distribution agents. In this State the distribution is being carried on through the help and direction of M. Metcalf, agricultural extension forestry specialist for the University of California.

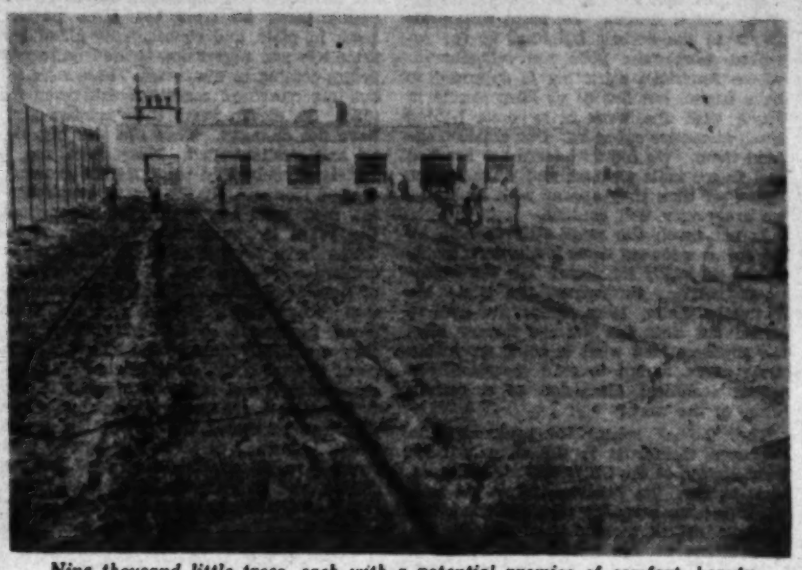
Antelope Valley, in Los Angeles county, is by nature an area that has very few native leafy trees, and so it provides an excellent district in which to try out plantings appropriate to its soil and climate, and to observe the effects of trees on agriculture. Certainly the farmers there have long been interested in tree plantings around their homes and other buildings and for windbreak purposes. Extensive plantings there have been held back in the past because of the cost.

In 1927 the writer took the matter up with the Antelope Valley Farm Bureau and there was an immediate and enthusiastic response which resulted in a request for seedling stock and the appointment of a committee to look after the matter. Harry Graham was the chairman, and J. A. Lloyd of Rosamond and S. D. Longwell of the Redman district were the other members. These three men have been very active in promoting the tree planting program of the valley.

Early in 1928, M. B. Pratt, State forester, started propagating a supply of seedlings and these became available early in the spring of 1929. Antelope Valley received 7000 little trees then. Most of the farmers who got them received from 100 to 200.

The Arizona ash and the Chinese elm have proved to be the most popular of the varieties. Black locust, osage, English elm, Monterey cypress and catalpa were among the varieties also distributed. The Arizona cypress proved to be well adapted to the valley conditions, but the Monterey cypress was a total failure?

The results of the early plantings were not altogether satisfactory. The trees were small and evidently needed more care and attention than most of the ranchers could give them under field conditions throughout the summer months. And so it was decided that better results could be secured if the seedlings were held in nursery form for a year under local conditions. About 9000 small trees accordingly were planted at the Antelope Union High School in March of this year. The planting was made by a large number of residents of Antelope Valley, all of whom were vitally interested in the project. The school is caring for these trees and will do so until they are ready for distribution. Last spring an additional 1000 trees were distributed directly.



Nine thousand little trees, each with a potential promise of comfort, beauty and many other values to Antelope Valley ranchers, were put in the union high school nursery at Lancaster this February. In another year they will be planted on the ranches of that district. All 9000 of them make hardly a drop in the bucket of that valley's tree needs.

Those who are familiar with the typical appearance of Antelope Valley may be surprised to learn that this is a driveway to the L. G. Weld ranch, a few miles out of Lancaster. Here trees have been nurtured until they shade the house and other buildings adequately, provide windbreaks and help make a beauty spot in what was once a wilderness.

The Cost

The seedlings supplied by the State nursery cost $5 per thousand, not including the express on them. In Antelope Valley these trees are held in the nursery for another year, without any cost to the ranchers. Allowing for mortality among them, it is figured that the cost per tree will probably not exceed 2 cents. Such trees normally sell for a good deal more than that. However, this supply will be limited entirely for use in Antelope Valley. It is expected that ranchers there will be able to plant from one-eighth to one-half an acre to trees at a cost of not over $5.

This has stimulated much interest in the whole project. The supply which will

The ranchers of the valley didn't wait for George or somebody else to do it—they rolled up their sleeves and helped start the little saplings that are depended upon to redeem this once-arid waste. James Pritchard (left) and Harry Kreymer, both Antelope Valley alfalfa growers, have come in to aid in putting the trees in the prepared ground.

June's Cherry Time

CROP LIGHT, BUT FRUIT WAS BIG AND GOOD

By W. A. Linkletter

JUNE is cherry month in Cherry Valley and Beaumont. There are over 1100 acres of cherry orchards in this district. The cherry crop is light this season but most of the fruit is large and of fine flavor. There was a very heavy blossoming season but exceptionally cool weather and rains are presumed to have prevented proper pollination and a light set of fruit followed.

The four principal varieties grown commercially in this section are Black Tartarians, Bings, Lamberts and Royal Annes. The Black Tartarians are early cherries and begin to ripen in quantities about May 20, the harvest ending around June 10. The Bings commence to ripen the first week in June and the Royal Annes about June 10. Lamberts and a few other late varieties continue to ripen through the latter part of June.

What is said to be the most productive and profitable cherry orchard in this section this year is one owned by Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Kirk, in Cherry Valley. Their ten-acre tract, eight and one-half acres of which were planted to cherries in 1912, was formerly known as the Peter Wigg ranch. Peter Wigg was an expert orchardist and some very heavy crops were produced on the place while he owned it. Mr. Kirk purchased it three years ago and has shown that he "knows his cherries" for under his management his orchard produced 28,000 pounds of cherries the first year, 40,000 pounds last year and is expected to produce about 40,000 pounds this season. His Tartarian crop was a little light this year—only 16,000 pounds, but his Royal Annes he expects to yield between 20,000 and 24,000 pounds before July 1.

This cherry orchard is planted in rows twenty feet each way, half to Tartarians and half to Royal Annes, with the exception of a few Bings and Lamberts in each row. This arrangement is said to be ideal for perfect pollination. The systematic and scientific care given the trees has also been instrumental in bringing heavy production. Every fall a cover crop is planted between the trees. Last September thirty pounds of purple vetch per acre was disced in and followed by a heavy irrigation. The winter rains furnish enough moisture to produce a heavy cover crop which was between three and four feet high when disced in about the first of April. Later the orchard was cultivated and would have been given another thorough irrigation had it not been for a heavy rain which came the first week in May.

Mr. Kirk trims his cherry trees lightly each winter after the leaves drop and sprays every third year with Bordeaux mixture. The extra heavy cover crop produced in this orchard the past spring prevented the cherry trees from blossoming as early as usual, Mr. Kirk thinks, and this delay helped in producing a heavy set of fruit in a light cherry year.

Last year Black Tartarian cherries from this orchard sold at from 8 to 15 cents, and the Royal Annes at 7½ cents per pound. This season the Tartarians found a ready market in Los Angeles and Arizona at 13 to 17 cents per pound. For the past few years Royal Annes from this orchard have been going to the Ontario cannery but this year Mr. Kirk received a higher bid from a chain store.

The Kirk orchard also contains sixty Santa Rosa plums, sixty Tragedy plums, thirty-five French prunes and a family orchard consisting of apricot, apple, nectarine, peach and pear trees, all of which are in heavy bearing.

Each September the Kirks buy from 500 to 1000 baby chicks and during the winter months these help supply the demand for friers at Palm Springs and Banning. The hens are kept for eggs and the fertiliser for the orchard.

Mr. Kirk was formerly a newspaper man of Los Angeles who, tiring of the strenuous life, came to Beaumont to be a fruit farmer.

The new packing-house and cold storage plant of Carl Mellor, just east of this city, was opened with beginning of the cherry season. Mr. Mellor is a grower as well as a shipper, and owns four 5-acre tracts of young cherry trees. During the peak of the cherry season 3000 to 4000 pounds of cherries were shipped daily from the Mellor plant to Arizona, New Mexico and Texas.

'Cots in South Africa

Within the past five years it is reported that apricot-tree planting has been very heavy in South Africa. Most of the fruit now grown is around Cape Town and is said to be of excellent quality. There are approximately 1,300,000 apricot trees in the Cape Town area and 1,000,000 more reported in the Golden Valley, Cape Province, region. Dried apricots may become a considerable factor in the world trade in the future.

Solved the Problem

They Know How to Market All Their Sweet Corn

By Angus Fuller

In their farm business Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lowe of Palms, near Culver City, act as their own middlemen and retail their own garden produce. Their products include cantaloupes, tomatoes, berries, etc., but they specialize in sweet corn. For the last four of their nine years in business the only corn they have grown has been Golden Bantam and varieties derived from it. They now retail fifty acres of sweet corn in a season, which you will agree is a great deal of corn to sell by the dozen.

Oats and barley are rotated with the corn. The seed is carefully selected and grown in a separate field. Nearly all the corn is grown without irrigation.

About February 1, the earliest corn is planted. Other fields are planted at intervals of ten days, from February to the first of July. These plantings so closely following one another produce a continuous supply. This is the reason for the success of the business, together with the fact that the corn is taken straight from the field to the wayside stand, where it is sold the same day, often in the same hour that it was taken from the stalk in the field. It is the same with the berries, beans and other crops.

All this means that there are many details to look after. In addition to the crops that are irrigated, each field of corn gets individual attention from the time the little green spears come through the ground. At the proper age, sweet corn must be thinned and later the offshoots or suckers at the base of the main stalks must be removed, to allow the ears to grow as large as possible. It takes experts to do this without checking the growth of the plant.

Early each week-day morning, Mr. Lowe and his helpers drive out to the fields for the first corn to be sold that day. Experience enables them to see at a glance the ears that are at just the right stage. For a day or two the ears maintain their maximum tender sweetness, then their pearly luster dims and some of the sugar changes into starch. The corn is picked up before the sunshine can wilt it and hustled to the stand. Here Mrs. Lowe and her assistants open every ear and sort it into five grades. The husks are left on the ears to help keep them fresh. Many ears must be discarded on account of the larvae of a night-flying moth that finds the thin husks of the Golden Bantam easier to pierce than those of the more robust growing white varieties.

Customers come from far and near. Women predominate, naturally, but one man stated that he had bought corn there for five years. If a new customer stops for something else, he or she is apt to be given a sample of corn. During the latter part of the season a table and pencil are provided in which buyers may write their addresses if they wish to know when the first corn will be ready the following spring. Over a hundred cards were mailed this year and many of the recipients called the first part of June and were pleased that this season the corn is ripe earlier than it was last year. They may have Mrs. Lowe examine each ear for them, but the old patrons usually like to select their own.

Corn is brought in from the fields through the day; the last picking is late in the afternoon. Sometimes an extra man is drafted from another job to help.

That they secure interest and satisfaction as well as a moderate profit from their work seemed to me to be illustrated by this chance remark of Mrs. Lowe's as her husband drove past a house on the way to the station. "The man who lives there bought two dozen ears of corn yesterday. I wonder how he liked them."

A School for Trees

HERE THEY'RE TRAINED FOR ORCHARD LIFE

By Iva M. McFadden

ALL California is proud of her educational system. We point with pride to the artistic buildings so far removed from "the little red schoolhouse" where American schooling is supposed to have begun, but few of us keep closely in touch with the work being done behind these attractive exteriors. Our children attend them. We see that teeth are brushed and finger nails cleaned, and when in due course of time they appear with diplomas, we are pretty well content.

Is not much the same attitude held by the farmers toward those institutions maintained especially for them? For the experiment stations throughout the State are distinctly theirs. Here agriculture goes to school but does the average farmer have the slightest idea what is going on within these areas, except to read occasionally a rather technical discussion of a certain phase of the work?

The "home" school for agriculture in Southern California is the citrus experiment station of the University of California, at Riverside. Its location against the rolling hills is an arresting one, and the artful arrangement of the buildings and the attractiveness of the landscaping is worth attention. This much is to be seen from the highway, but what do all these varied plots mean? These big trees and little trees? These crowded together and those kept apart?

Curiosity propelled the writer to ask just that of Dr. H. J. Webber, dean of the institution from its founding until last July, when he resigned to give his entire time to certain phases of work in which he is especially interested. With the genial courtesy that is so characteristic of him, the doctor answered the question by a personally conducted tour which gives a general idea of the station as a whole.

Not Just Citrus

In the first place, while the institution is called a citrus experiment station, its aim, which calls for a very expansive program, is to make of this in every sense of the word, a school for all of Southern California not only for citrus, for deciduous trees are getting a very large share of attention, and the newer subtropicals are being given a chance to "show their stuff."

There are 777 acres in the grounds, which may be a surprise to those who have only passed by. They extend back into the rough hills and down into the valley much farther than is realized from the highway. Such an acreage gives ample space for expansion. When the institution first began to take form in 1917, the place was nothing but a barren and unpromising territory, but after twelve years it has been transformed not only into an experiment station but into a place of beauty as well. Those who enjoy statistics may be pleased to know that, whereas the State of California bought the present orchard site for $300 an acre, they are now worth from $1000 to $2000 an acre, and that in their operation certain experimental orchards have not only paid back all expense for land and improvements, but have made a substantial profit as well.

However, profit or loss to the establishment is merely an incident. Its operation is not conducted with profit in mind. The aim must be to take all time, money and infinite pains to find out what the individual farmer has neither time, money nor patience to work out for himself. For instance, the orchard which has happened to show good returns is really nothing more nor less than an experiment in fertilizers. Here Dr. L. D. Bachelor, now director of the station, has for years been trying out various fertilizer combinations and methods of application. One hundred and ninety-nine different experiments have been carried down through a long period of time. Guard rows of trees stand between the different plots to allow each to speak definitely for itself. To make the conclusions more trustworthy, no fertilizers were used at all in the early years, to allow both trees and soil to produce unaided and show what they were capable of before they were assisted by fertilization. Such results have an authenticity that cannot possibly be duplicated by commercial orchards.

Here, too, are the experiments which convinced Dr. Webber of the necessity for action in the matter of root stocks. Years ago, suspicious of undersized nursery trees, he planted large, small and medium-sized young trees, all from the same nursery block in plots, and consequently all of the same age and parentage, treated uniformly before coming to his hands. There were set out under orchard conditions and cared for alike. In eleven years their relative sizes have not changed. They are still big, little and medium-sized. Near them, too, a variety of unbudded seedlings are growing, derived from exactly the sort of conglomerate seed that has been used throughout the years by nurserymen as root stock. These have been allowed to grow under orchard conditions, just to show what sort of trees they are. The variety is astounding! They range from big sturdy trees down to dwarfs so low in vitality that they are barely able to keep alive. Such proof of variability, substantiated by numerous checks and rechecks brought to Dr. Webber the desire for final proof by variety plantings in groves throughout the State. These plantings of trees on various root stocks are all exactly duplicated at the station, and they are quite the most interesting of the newer citrus plantings on the grounds.

A Variety Orchard

Another part of the citrus experiments is a variety orchard where a thousand or more different types are demonstrating the good and bad qualities of all the numerous cousins in the citrus world. Here, too, some 5000 hybrids are being studied by Dr. H. B. Frost. Overhead irrigation is being tried out with lemon varieties.

In the greenhouses extensive experiments are being carried out on propagation of citrus trees. Some very unusual tests are also being made by Dr. A. R. C. Hass on plant nutrition, whereby all the various food elements and the relative amounts needed for trees are being established. In this connection especially fine Eureka lemon trees are growing in huge pots and at two years of age are surprisingly large.

Citrus pests are receiving a large share of attention. Certain entirely isolated sections are testing out scale infestation, while an extremely interesting series is in progress on the introduction and colonization of parasites of various scale insects and mealy bugs. This work is being carried on under Prof. H. S. Smith. Much of the advance experimental work for the State is being done here. It is the only institution, aside from the United States Department of Agriculture, that is importing parasites from various other lands. Although these are never brought in unless they seem to have proven their worth in their native country, they are still under inspection until their worth or worthlessness is known. The receiving room in which they are held is insect proof to prevent the escape of any possible undesirables. If they prove of value, they are released to the various county insectaries to be propagated for general distribution.

Aside from all the citrus work, actual plantings have been made of interesting subtropicals such as mangos, avocados, etc., while deciduous trees have been planted in large blocks to establish important matters pertaining to them. Trees have been propogated resistent to crown gall, and methods of testing this resistance have been worked out. Apricot pruning has come in for its share of attention and peaches are being bred, in an effort to get resistance to delayed foliation and thus adapt them better to our southern climate. Persimmons and olives have been planted to study spacing as well as pruning methods. New fig orchards have been set out quite extensively for similar purposes, as well as for the testing of varieties and hybrids. Considerable work has been done on walnuts, and already the older walnut plantings contain trees from many other countries.

Aside from the work on trees already proven suited to the Southern California climate, small or irregular sections of the grounds are being set out to plant odds and ends from every country which might have something to interest us. Many of these are ornamentals or unusual shade trees or hedge plants. There are, for instance, peculiar citrus relatives from Cuba, Africa, China, Japan and Palestine; unusual elms; forage plants from Africa; the sausage tree with cunningly imitative fruits and a most gratifying shade; untried guavas. While the variations from other lands are numerous, there is still room for a tiny triangle where California's own flowers may bloom each spring in an enchantment of color.

Indeed, so widely diversified is the work of this station, that even with Dr. Webber as guide, one comes away unable to give anything like an adequate picture of all that is being undertaken there. It would be better to go and see it.

be available at Lancaster next spring will not be anywhere near sufficient to meet the requirements of those who have made requests for them already. And so, because of this demand and because of the great possibilities they offer for real farm improvement, it is planned to plant 10,000 small trees each year in nursery form, to be distributed until every rancher in the valley has as many trees as he needs. It seems to be a safe prediction that it will require 100,000 trees to take care of the needs of Antelope Valley. The average farm can easily use 200 trees or more.

The uses of trees in every country are too well known to need repetition here, but wherever a tree is useful elsewhere its value is doubled in the arid districts. The shade that is grateful in eastern summers is doubly so in the desert country. The beauty that groups of trees produce in other lands is enhanced many times over where the landscape is a monotonous stretch, unvaried and unbroken by verdure. Their value as windbreaks has been discussed many times, and these make possible the cultivation of many things which otherwise could not endure the dry winds that sweep across the wide arid stretches.

The woodlot is particularly valuable in that it can easily be made into a recreation center for both children and grown folks. The woodlot can supply fence posts and firewood. Its cost during the first few years has also been estimated at not to exceed $5 for care, cultivation and water, and this added to the first $5 charge, is a very small item to be figured against the comfort, beauty and utility it will return.

Feeding Our Plants

APPLYING FERTILIZERS TO FATTEN SOILS

By Burris G. Wood
State Department of Agriculture

ALTHOUGH there are at least ten or eleven chemical elements which are thought to be essential for plant food, it is customary to consider only three of them as fertilizer—nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash. Commercial fertilizers may contain one, two or all of these substances depending upon the source of the material. Mixed fertilizers contain at least two forms of plant food and usually three, and more than one kind of nitrogen, along with "filler," which is any substance not containing plant food and added to make up weight and give the desired composition or proper percentage of ingredients.

Nearly 8,000,000 tons of fertilizer were sold in the United States last year. California consumed about 130,000 tons. This material contained about 17½ per cent plant food. The value of a fertilizer depends on the kind and quantity of plant food it contains. The fertilizer manufacturer analyzes the material he buys and pays for it on the basis of the chemist's analysis. He "plays safe." Large corporations and industrial concerns have all their purchases analyzed, and specifications or requirements are laid down that the quality of the material shall not vary, except within certain specified limits.

The small farmer who buys his fertilizer on a small scale cannot afford to have a chemical analysis made of a few sacks of plant food. Nothing can be told by an inspection or examination, without the aid of equipment. For this reason, California requires a guarantee from the manufacturer as to the composition of the fertilizer and the percentage of nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash. This law is enforced by the division of chemistry of the State Department of Agriculture.

Our Soil Needs

The use of fertilizer in any particular part of the State is best understood by county agricultural commissioners and farm advisers. Their knowledge is based on experiences with some one type of fertilizer which has been most successful for a given crop. California soils are usually lacking in nitrogen and phosphoric acid. It is these two plant foods that are found in nearly all fertilizers sold in California.

Nitrogen is a gas and it should be plentiful in the soil. The air we breathe consists of four-fifths nitrogen and one-fifth oxygen, but as a gas it is only available to legumes which, by means of their root bacteria, are able to convert nitrogen out of the air. Most crops absorb nitrogen only after it has been converted by chemical means into some form of nitrate. Commercial fertilizers often contain nitrogen in both organic and inorganic forms. Organic nitrogen includes dried blood, seed meals and tankages, which sooner or later become available in the soil. In speaking of availability, we mean that the plant food is in such form as to be readily taken up by plants.

The nitrogen in form of nitrate, as in nitrate of soda, may be taken up directly by plants, but the value of other nitrogenous materials depends on the rapidity with which they become changed to nitrates in the soil. Any agency which accelerates the transformation of these organic bodies into assimilable compounds or foods that the plant can absorb, increase the availability of nitrogen to plant life. The temperature as well as the composition of the soil and activity of the micro-organisims in the soil help to give nitrogen to plants as a food.

Availability does not necessarily mean agricultural value, or crop-producing power as many factors enter into these questions. A few of these factors may be considered here:

First, the kind of season. Nitrate of soda is less useful than other forms in a wet season, because it is liable to be washed below the reach of the roots and lost, unless it is applied just at the right time or on a very heavy soil.

Second, the kind of crop. Quick-acting fertilizers like ammonium sulphate and nitrate of soda are more effective on crops which grow and develop quickly. The organic fertilizers are slower in acting and must undergo a change before their nitrogen is available and are, therefore, better for plants of a long growing period, unless a number of applications of quick-acting fertilizers are to be made.

Third, the season. The change from organic nitrogen, first to ammonia and then to nitrate, takes place more readily as the temperature approaches 98 deg. Fahrenheit. For this reason the organic fertilizers are relatively less effective for winter than for summer crops. Likewise, a material which gives excellent results during a warm, moist season might be very unsatisfactory when the season is short, cold and dry.

Potash is chiefly supplied to the soil in the most available form, which is the water soluble sulphate. The potash problem in the United States—that of cheaper potash, free from high transportation charges, which are paid for by the farmer—seems to demand the exploitation of nearby resources. America still consumes 12 per cent of the total German production and 32 per cent of all German exports. In 1928 we produced 104,000 tons. The bulk of our potash is still imported. In 1928, 355,000 tons of potash were used as plant food and all but 55,000 tons were imported.

Phosphates are obtained from bone and from acid-treated phosphate rock (superphosphate) which renders it available. Superphosphate production in 1929 was 1 per cent below that of 1928, which corresponds closely to the decrease in fertilizer tonnage for last year. In the thirty years since 1900, there has been an increase of nearly 40 per cent in the outbreak of superphosphate. Likewise, the increase in the available phosphoric acid over the same period was from 14 to 17½ per cent.

The trend in 1928-29 seemed to be toward even greater concentration of ferilizer materials. Our mixed fertilizers today will run eighteen to twenty-two units of plant food, whereas ten years ago, ten to twelve total units represented the customary mix. Over 2,000,000 tons of synthetic nitrogen (the most expensive of the plant foods) were produced in 1929, as compared with 1,000,000 tons in 1923. Nearly all this was used as fertilizer.

With all this increased production, decrease in freight charges, bagging and cost of handling of the more concentrated fertilizer a fall in prices has come, which has been beneficial to the American farmer.

isting efforts made toward the solution of water problems than to exploit any particular field. The appropriation was made with the realization that the water problem in the basin was too comprehensive and too immense to admit of treatment by county, municipal or private agencies but that the co-operation of these groups is indispensable.

To assist in the work to be carried on by the State Division of Water Resources, the Los Angeles County Conservation Association will organize local committees of civic leaders interested in conservation. These groups will be a sort of "steering committee," acting in an advisory capacity to the State agency.

Burying Water

Water so far stored in the underground system has caused a definite rise in the level of wells at Redlands, San Bernardino, and in Riverside county, says Mr. Cuttle, and ten times the present amount of water used could be handled efficiently. When the committee visited the site recently, the members reported, all the water run into the spreading basins disappeared before it had traveled half a mile down the wash.

The submerged weir to be built across the mouth of the canyon is not for impounding water, but to check the storm waters, desilt them, and divert the stream from the waste channel to the spreading grounds.

George Hinckley, city engineer for Redlands, addressed the party on some of the details of the proposed weir, and of the water levels as observed after a season of spreading. The weir is necessary, he said, for better control of flood waters. Water that carries silt, he said, cannot be used on the gravel beds, since silt proves more nearly impervious to water than concrete. Clear water only can be used, and the great check dam is necessary for that purpose as well as to divert it more easily. The job will be financed by equal shares from the three boards of supervisors and by the reforestation association.

Forty-Five Minutes per Acre

When wheat was harvested with a sickle and threshed with a flail, from thirty-five to fifty hours of labor were required for harvesting and threshing an acre with a yield of fifteen bushels. The introduction of the cradle saved about 10 hours per acre. At present farmers in the Great Plains use from four to five hours in harvesting an acre of wheat with a binder and threshing from the shock with a stationary thresher; from three to four hours when the crop is harvested with a header and threshed with a stationary thresher; and an average of three-fourths of an hour when the combined harvester thresher is used.

The culls left from canning tomatoes may be made into soup, or puree, or catsup.

New Pea District

Arizona Prepares to Develop Truck Crops in Chino Valley

PRESCOTT.—Two hundred acres of garden peas will be grown in Chino Valley, near Prescott, this summer for shipment early in the fall. The acreage will be largely in the nature of a test demonstration, and those interested believe it has an excellent chance of being successful. If profitable, it is thought the experiment will lead to considerable development in vegetable growing in the valley for marketing during a time when very few truck sections can produce.

The 200 acres are being financed by the Barker-Miller Company of Phoenix, which operates on a large scale in Imperial and Salt River valleys and at Salinas. Indirectly, the demonstration goes back to the first appearance of a vegetable shipper in Chino Valley two years ago, when the Tracy-Waldron Company planted a considerable acreage of cauliflower there for transplanting in Salt River Valley, when it became cool enough in the fall. The Barker-Miller Company planned a similar arrangement this year and then became interested in the possibilities of peas.

After investigation, this organization offered to make the Chino Valley farmers cash advances to cover land preparations and seed, on the customary commission marketing basis. E. S. Turville, county agricultural agent, has been active in working out the arrangements.

The peas are to be planted early in July and will be harvested in September. A new irrigation well producing 1000 gallons per minute with a lift of eighty feet, will insure plenty of water for the project. Truck gardening has been carried on in Chino Valley on a small scale for several years, but this is the first attempt to produce on a scale that will afford out-of-State shipments for the crop.

Largest Morning Circulation on Pacific Coast

The Los Angeles Times issues no late afternoon or early evening editions. More than 98% of its total daily circulation is straight morning circulation nearly all of which is delivered to homes by carrier. 92% of The Times 40-mile circulation is distributed by its own carriers, and 5% by independent carriers and dealers, the highest home-delivered ratio of any metropolitan newspaper in the United States.

Times morning leadership consists of something far more than mere numerical supremacy. When this circulation is translated into people and purchasing power, its relative magnitude is overwhelming. Copies of The Times go directly to the home and are read by all the members of the family—fathers, mothers, sons and daughters. A large percentage of the next morning circulation is street sales, and since morning street sales are made to people on their way to work, such copies never are seen by the family at home.

Growth and Trend for Past Two Years

Notwithstanding the substantial character of The Times circulation and its absolute freedom from unwarranted extras, all-hour editions and other forms of inflation, sworn circulation statements show that—

TODAY the Los Angeles Times has 16,000 MORE daily circulation than it had two years ago!

TODAY the second morning paper has 1,867 LESS daily circulation than it had two years ago!

A DOUBLE BLUFF

An Episode in the Married Life of Helen and Warren

By MABEL HERBERT URNER
Creator of the "Helen and Warren" Characters

If you are going to Europe this summer you should have the addresses of Helen and Warren's favorite hotels, restaurants, antique shops and rug markets. Also suggestions about unusual places to see and things to do. Write for the Helen and Warren guidelet to Europe, enclosing a two-cent stamp. Address your request to Mabel Herbert Urner, Sunday Magazine, Los Angeles Times.

JUST to lie there—not have to get up! Longing to turn over and doze off again.

But no companionable mound in Warren's bed. His blankets thrown back on sheeted vacancy. And from the bath, the reproach of energetic splashing.

Helen cuddling under the covers. His Sunday for golf. Why couldn't she sleep?

But knowing she wouldn't. However tired or headachy, always dutifully up to breakfast with him.

Indulging her five-minutes-more urge. He still had to shave.

Snuggling down again in the seductive warmth. Getting up never quite so hard. Her head throbbing. That brooding morning-after depression.

If only they hadn't stayed so late! Almost three when they reached home.

Big parties—how they tired her! The strain of scattered conversation. And too self-conscious for facile repartee.

The five minutes up. Quick—not another second!

Stoically out of bed. Forcing her floor-touching exercises.

"Why in blazes can't I have a decent towel?" Warren emerged. "Never get a man-sized bath towel except in Europe. Bring a few home instead of all your junk."

"But dear, think what they'd cost to launder! We have it done by the pound."

"Well, of all the tight-wads! Scrimpin' on the wash! Where're my golf shoes?"

"Why, aren't they right there, dear?" with practiced patience.

Part of his getting-dressed technique to ask for things before looking.

Helen thinking of the child in delirium with its incessant refrain, "I ain't doing nothing, mother." Surely hers would be, "Why, isn't it there, dear?"

In the bathroom. A lukewarm shower. Her stoicism not equal to a cold one.

"Don't loaf all morning," his irate call. "I want to make that nine-fifty."

Draping her velvet negligee, and out to the sun-glamored breakfast table.

But neither the buoyant weather nor the coffee fragrance mollified Warren's grouch.

His grapefruit glumly dispatched, he cast a withering eye on the bacon.

"Skimpier every morning! Only six splinters—need a microscope to see 'em!"

"I'll tell her to serve more, dear. Take it all—I don't want any."

"Why not?" always irritated when she didn't eat. "Off your feed, eh?"

Now flushingly conscious that he was looking at her—really seeing her. That rare, disconcerting scrutiny.

"Great guns, you look washed out!" bluntly. "Too much dissipation? If you can't stand a slow party like that—not much of a sport!"

"Why, I'm just sleepy! We didn't get to bed till almost three."

"This darn coffee's cold. And what's wrong with this cream? Curdled?"

"It's perfectly fresh. You're determined to find fault!" her patience exhausted. "Just because we were up late and you feel horrid—"

"What's that?" explosively. "Think that tame little affair knocked me out? You're the one that's all in—can't stand stayin' up after ten."

"Why, dear, I'm not doing any grouching."

"Not, eh?" hurling down his napkin. "Sittin' there with a mug long as a yardstick. Now where's my golf bag? Just about time to make that train."

"Isn't it in the closet?" following him out to the hall.

An approving appraisal of his sport-suited height. The gray tweed plus-fours wonderful with that London sweater. English shoes, too—

"Dear, those socks!" a dismayed discovery. "That awful green check—with that blue sweater!"

"What's wrong with this combination?" burrowing into the closet. "Now I'm playin' golf—not competin' in a fashion show. Where the devil's my bag?"

"Right back of that suitcase, where it always is. Wait, I'll get it."

Dragging out the stick-bristling bag. Dusting it off.

"Never mind the dry cleaning," snatching it from her. "Find my cap. No, the other one. Aw, let it go. Haven't all morning to waste."

"Dear, when will you be back? The Stevens said they'd get me home by six."

"Same time," slinging the bag over his shoulder. "Give 'em my regards."

Returning to the disordered bedroom, listlessly Helen straightened up.

Making the beds. Always her self-assumed task on the maid's Sunday off.

Now permeating peace and quiet. If only she could stay—an elysian rest.

Why couldn't she? Just because of Warren's scoffing? But he needn't know!

Racing to the telephone. Hoping desperately they hadn't started.

"Mrs. Stevens? . . . Oh, we didn't get home from the Martins till almost three! I'm afraid I'd be wretched company today . . . That's dear of you, but I'd better just curl up here and sleep. Warren says I'm a rotten sport—I suppose he's right . . . Yes, I'd love to—any other time."

Back to the bedroom with surging relief.

Oppressively hot. Turning off the hissing radiator.

Opening the windows. Drawing the shades. The soothing semidarkness.

"No, I can't let you stay," as Pussy Purr-Mew jumped expectantly on the bed. "You'll be wanting to get out and wake me up."

Hugging the cuddlesome Persian. Then reluctantly shutting her out.

Now! Nothing else to be done. Free to slip into bed—and stay there!

Her hot, throbbing head sinking gratefully on the pillow's linened coolness.

No, Warren needn't know. Fortunately incurious. Never any questions about where she went or what she did.

No need to fib outright. Simply let him think she had gone with the Stevens!

Now not worrying over anything. Just relax. Delicious, sedative relaxation.

Already drowsing. Her thoughts hazy, blurred—

A soft, furry warmth against her cheek. Starting up, half awake.

Pussy Purr-Mew! Curled on the pillow in purring-at-home content.

"Why, didn't I put you out? How did you get back?"

The windows open—and in the library—She had come along that narrow ledge!

"You must't ever do that again!" stroking her. "You might slip off—No, I'm not going to be lazy with you any longer."

Twelve-thirty by the boudoir clock. Rested now. Her headache banished.

Planning a leisurely afternoon as she slipped into a favorite blue crepe. The tinkering tasks she always loved—

Perfect, if only Warren were here! Sunday his one chance for golf. Yet her joy when it rained—a quiet day at home together.

Quarter of one. Dr. Burness's weekly sermon still on. Always worth while—spiritual, inspiring.

Hurrying in to turn on the radio.

At the library door, stopping short. An incredulous gasp.

On the couch—WARREN!

Sprawled out, his feet on her antique-velvet pillow.

Sound asleep! A magazine heaving rhythmically on his sweatered chest.

He had come back! Not golfing! Why?

An exultant certainty. Too tired! And too stubborn to admit it. Thinking she wouldn't find out.

Gleeful at the farcical situation. Each yielding to the morning-after fatigue—and relying on the other's absence to conceal it!

Always he bluffed out of awkward situations. Caught this time!

But so would she be—when he found her here!

No, prolong the comedy! A mischievous impulse. Let him think she had just come in—that he alone had surrendered.

Always her flair for an ingenious strategy. And after his derisive superiority, he deserved to be disconcerted!

Tiptoeing to the bedroom, she slipped on her coat and hat.

Too soon to be back from the drive—she'd said about six. How to explain?

Say the Stevens had to be home for lunch. Unexpected guests.

Stealing quietly down the hall. Noiselessly opening the door.

Closing it with a sure-to-wake-him bang!

Impishly anticipating his confusion. Always he exposed her subterfuges. Now this rare chance to pay him back!

At the library door. Trying to recapture her first genuine surprise.

"Why, Warren!"

"Eh?" the magazine sliding off as he started up. "What the dickens—"

"Why, dear, what're you doing here?" with well-feigned aamsement. "How did you get back so soon?"

"Didn't go," a yawning stretch. "Felt a bit groggy—knew I'd be off my game. And with those sharks—But how come you're here?"

"Oh, I—the Stevens had to get back," a guilty flush. "Company for lunch."

His reaction disappointing. Not at all disconcerted! Coolly lighting his pipe.

"Good a yarn as any," aiming the match at an ashtray. "Great little schemer—but you should've tipped off Pussy Purr-Mew."

"Pussy Purr-Mew!" a quivering premonition.

"Yep, scratching at your door. Had to let her in. And there you were, snoozin' away—dead to the world!"

"Dear, I—well, I just COULDN'T go motoring!" slipping out of her futilely donned wraps. "I was too tired for words."

"So you tried to sneak in a nap!' swooping down for the magazine.

"So did you!" defensively. "You thought I'd be out—I wouldn't know—"

"Couple of cheaters cheated, eh?" he grinned. "And the way you tried to sidestep! Neat trick—if the meow hadn't gummed the works. Well, Kitten, guess we're both pretty bum sports. Not cut out for the night life. Have to lay off the big-time blowouts—at least till the next one!"

Exhaustion takes place sooner and of course, the artificial delivery, with its serious potentialities, must ensue.

Even later, the effects are felt.

The neurotically distraught woman usually has difficulties when the milk "comes in"—if it does so.

In short, there is no reason why the average normal woman should face childbirth with fear or trepidation. It is not a pathological process. It is not a disease. Procreation is a normal physiological function and should be fraught with neither terror nor fear.

Get this attitude of mind. Then childbirth will be robbed of much of its present difficulties.

Faith Healing

Faith healing is undoubtedly the oldest of the healing arts. Records of its cures are found in the most ancient writings. It is incorporated in religions, in ancient metaphysics, in the doctrines of the modern psychoanalysts and in every sort of theology, modern and ancient.

To sarcastically dismiss it with a pooh-pooh and say that it is a figment of the imagination, is not sufficient. "The proof of the pudding lies in the eating." The proof of faith cures lies in the results.

We cannot deny the testimony of millions upon millions who have benefited or become cured through nothing else but the supreme power of their faith. Never mind faith in what. Whatever the object of our faith may be, we know that that which we call soul, or spirit, dominates the clay carcass we call our body. This is believed by millions, unquestionably, and without qualms or doubts.

To merely present this vast amount of personal evidence would of itself be convincing. But that is not enough. As a "hard-boiled" physiologist, it is essential that we convert this source of energy achieved through faith cures, into terms of physiological laws.

What is there in the power of mental suggestion which will set a badly functioning stomach aright? What is there in tremendous religious zeal which will restore activity to atrophied muscles, which will kindle a living spark in a listless joint, which will dynamically rejuvenate, charge and recharge bodies which have been exhausted from pain, disease and abnormalities.

We cannot pooh-pooh these facts away. Instead, we must look at what we see before our eyes.

In spite of our physiological investigation, in spite of all we may ascertain by vivisection, test-tube analysis and the keen observation of experiments and observations, we still haven't gotten to the source of life. This clay body of ours would be a dead, inert mass were it not for the actuating dynamic principle governing it.

There is something which charges the cells with life. It is electricity which spells the difference between the quick and the dead. It is the something which determines health or disease. In disease, this dynamic, pervading life current is absent or deficient, active or nonfunctioning.

What do we do when we charge our bodies with this new faith, or love, or intensity of religious fervor? From some hidden source, with whose mainspringa we are not acquainted, we gather to ourselves powers of renewed energy. The flagging muscles become recharged. the sickly glands are once more converted to full activity. Over the wires of the nervous system comes flowing a new vitality which was not known before. Not a cell of the body remains untouched, not a drop of blood but that does not receive its new bath of power, its new charge of dynamics.

Whence it comes, I know not. What it is, I know less. It is there, I know, you know. If you have the faith, it comes to you. If you believe strongly enough, a central power which is within you—call it your brain, your soul, your spirit, or what you please—governs this body of ours as absolutely, as positively as the existence of life itself. Know this, learn this, feel it and you will have solved for yourself the greatest problem before you—the survival of life over death.

We have invented a day and night appliance for bunions and overlapped toes, and we have ever reason to believe it will correct nine cases out of ten.

The night splints are worn while sleeping and the muscles are relaxed, to stretch the contracted tendons that distort the toes and cause this hideous deformity.

The day reducing appliance shields the bunion, hides the deformity and holds the toes in proper alignment and the normal traction for the bones will be re-established and in a short time the bunion disappears completely and forever.

John Steven McGroarty

It is pretty hard not to get out of patience with some folks, sometimes, isn't it, Conductor? said a man to us one day as we stood in the shining and lovely town of Ontario in our California of the South.

The Road of the Peppers and Acacias

We had been feasting our eyes and our soul on the marvelously beautiful street known as Euclid avenue.

Now, said the man to us, our eyes behold the most beautiful avenue in the world. I know, he said, because I have traveled the whole world over. And yet I meet people who rave about Unter den Linden and other streets of European cities, but who drive up and down Euclid avenue here in Ontario without giving it scarcely a look.

And isn't it all a man can do to be patient with these snobs? he asked.

But what matter about them, we answered and said. The psychology that applies to them is simple enough. They have been to Carcasonne. They had the money to go on. And when they return they just can't help rubbing it in on their less fortunate neighbors who are compelled to remain at home. It is a trait of human nature, we said.

Well, answered the man who was talking to us, it is a mean trait. And no one who lives in California without the means to ever set foot outside of it need be considered unfortunate. There is more beauty and more wonders between Siskiyou and San Diego than there is in all the rest of the world put together. For instance, look at this glorious street, he said.

And, indeed, "glorious" is the word for Euclid avenue in Ontario.

It was in the slant of the afternoon that we two were looking at it. Great acacias lined it on either side as far as the eye can see. Great stately acacias loaded with golden blossoms, the gentle winds strewing the gold of the blossoms to the ground in soft, yellow tapestries. Here and there the fronds of palms between the trees. In the center of the broad highway, far stretching to the very mountains, a seemingly endless park of myriad pepper trees lifting the joyous tracery of their branches from green lawns against a sky with which even the blue of the sky of Egypt cannot vie. Sloping from the majestic mountains down to the valley floor, it is set as though by a pageant master for the eye to best behold it. If Ontario made no boast save this gorgeous street it could well lay claim to the admiration of the world.

Some day there will be many another road in California to match Euclid of Ontario. We are just beginning to fare upon the quest of beauty, and to festoon the natural glory of the land with the magic and cunning of the landscaper's are.

There awhile back, a loved kinsman—a man of our clan and of our name— whose folks were in Virginia long before the Revolutionary War, made us a little visit in the green Verdugo Hills.

A Loved Kinsman Revives an old Society

The home of this kinsman is in Alexandria, which was once the home of Gen. George Washington. It was in Alexandria that the funeral of the great Father of our country was held. It was there that he met with his Masonic Lodge. And it was in Gadsby's Tavern that "The Washington Society of Alexandria" was organized thirty days after Washington's death. The society was organized for the purpose of continuing some of the philanthropies that the first President had carried on from his personal fortune during his lifetime.

This society continued to function until the time of the Civil War when it disbanded and, during the succeeding years, had been quite forgotten.

Now, as it happened, our kinsman of whom we are speaking in the Synagogue this blessed Sabbath morning, being a resident of Alexandria and an active member of the Society of the Colonial Wars and Sons of the Revolution, accidentally ran onto the trail of the historic "Washington Society of Alexandria." After much patient research in various places, and in Philadelphia especially, he was able to unearth the original records.

Well, to make a long story short, the old organization has been revived and is in full operation again. Our kinsman is its president, following in the footsteps of former presidents of the organization whose names are illustrious on the pages of American history. The organization is recruiting members at a rapid rate throughout the entire land. The lovers of the memory of George Washington are flocking to it with glad hearts.

By golies, you would never think how proud we are of our kinsman. He is an honor to the name and to the clan.

In the mail sack that we drag every so often up the trails of the chaparral to our little high house in the hills, there have come an amazing number of letters which take issue with us concerning our statement that the wild pigeon of North America, known more correctly in the vernacular as the passenger pigeon, and ornithologically as Ectopistes migratorius, has totally disappeared.

It Is a Pity It Is True

We wish, with all our heart, that the statement we made, there awhile back on this poor blundering page, was not based on facts. But, from all the evidence we have been able to gather, we were not in error.

The wild pigeon is gone as completely as its kindred bird, the famed dodo.

The ornithologists tell us that there have been more than 500 species of pigeons, and, this being the fact, it were easy enough for amateur naturalists to mistake certain wild pigeons still extant for the passenger pigeon.

The dodo, which was a big, exaggerated pigeon never known anywhere save in the Island of Mauritus, disappeared from the earth as long ago as the year 1681. Man then put an end to the dodo's harmless tribe. Now man has put also an end to the wild pigeon of North America. Man is a queer creature.

These statements that we make we have taken from books that are relied upon as authoritative.

When we were with the Welsh folk a few nights ago in the roaring town at the great Eisteddfod, which is the ancient festival of song of immemorial Wales, we were thinking of what the Welsh had brought as their gift to our America.

What the Welsh Brought to Our America

All races have brought something as their gift to America. The Teutons, the Latins, the Gauls, the Scandinavians and all the others have brought their gifts.

And what is it that the Welsh have brought—the Celts—that was what we were thinking over as we sat listening to the matchless music of Cymric songs in a great hall in the roaring town.

Well, the Welsh have brought at least two great gifts to our America—the gift of song which primarily is a gift from God. And the gift of a deep spirituality without which no nation can endure. We always think of the Welsh as the "singing race." And from our intimate knowledge of them through the years of our life we know of their deep spirituality. An essentially spiritual people are the Welsh. They are profoundly religious, and in the right way.

It was a happy night that we spent with them at the great Eisteddfod. Only the meeting made us a little homesick as we listened to the quaint Welsh dialect that has so softened and made almost beautiful our awkward English tongue. Old memories of the blue hills of home when we were young in Penn's Woods, and the Welsh were our neighbors and loving companions, swept our heart.

But, it was a happy night withal and we were glad that it came to us.

A member of the Congregation of the Faithful has sent us a clipping from a newspaper which relates that in the town of Bethlehem and also in the town of Allentown, back yonder in Penn's Woods where we were born, there has been a spiritual rebirth among that staid and thrifty class of the inhabitants known as the "Pennsylvania Dutch."

Back Yonder Among the Old Penn's Dutch

In Bethlehem, the newspaper states, "leading citizens of the Protestant denomination engaged in a drive to raise $50,000 for the Catholic Church of Saints Simon and Jude."

And it has also been made public that in Allentown the Reformed Church received donations from both Catholics and Jews toward a building fund.

Gosh, how times have changed. When we were a boy back yonder and used to go down to Bethlehem and Allentown to dances and picnics and everything like that, the Protestants and Catholics were always throwing rocks at each other. Both sides were about as bigoted and as intolerant as folks ever were on the face of this earth at any time in the world's history.

And now, it seems, they are just the other way. Instead of hating each other, they love each other. Instead of hindering each other, they help each other.

In short, they have really come to be real Christians.

Among the joys of the Synagogue, of which we are the self-constituted and often vain Conductor, never being sufficiently humble, and blundering so much that wise men must wonder, among the joys of the Synagogue, which are many, are the lovely little songs that are sent to us by so many who have the gift of song in their souls.

They Send Us Their Lovely Little Songs

It is always a matter of regret to us that we cannot publish in the little space of this Sunday page all these lovely songs. And all of them are indeed lovely, although many of them may lack technical construction and grammatical perfection.

Every song that wells from the human heart is lovely. Loveliness is at the very inception of a song. Poems are the expression of one's emotions.

Often the writer of a poem asks us to criticize his effort. But this is a thing that we never do, even though we were to think ourself capable to criticize.

We would not, for anything in the world, discourage any one who seeks to express a pent-up emotion in an outburst of song. And when we say "song," we mean it as a word to express all poetry.

It does not matter if the written poem never finds the printed page. It does not matter that the poet is paid no fee. The poem, itself, is its own reward, and all the reward that should be asked.

This were a dull world if in the heart's of the people there were no songs. And it is a happy thing to feel the glow of the Divine Fire in our hearts.

Chinese Herbs Cured Ulcers of the Stomach Without Operation

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:—

I have suffered with ulcers of the stomach for several years and getting worse recently. I have tried different remedies and doctors, also had X-rays taken which showed the ulcers at the lower mouth of the stomach. The medical doctors told me that the only way to get well would be to undergo an operation which I refused.

I was recommended to try Chinese Herbs at which time I commenced taking the Herb Treatments from S. P. Lee. I got results from the start. After two and a half months treatment I was completely cured without any trace of stomach trouble at all.

I am sure very grateful and pleased and will recommend his treatments to anyone suffering from stomach trouble.

CARE OF THE BODY

and I have had many of them in my practice—that did not have an antecedent background of this form of dietetic abuse. Hence, it is my claim that the first consideration in overcoming any phase of arthritis is the substitution of a fruit and vegetable diet for the customary great American diet.

Alkalization must occur in the primary tissues as contradistinct to the hyperacidity we customarily find in the tissues. A simple test of this can be made.

Urine analysis shows a high degree of acidity.

Buy a dime's worth of litmus paper in your drug store and test the mouth secretions. In health, they should be alkaline. In the autointoxication of arthritis, they are generally acid. If it turns blue litmus paper red, it is acid. If it turns red litmus paper blue, it is akaline. This is a simple test for those who are not familiar with chemistry.

There are many auxiliary agents which should be faithfully applied in an arthritis condition. There is great value in sun baths, osteopathic or chiropractic manipulation, ample drinking of demineralized water, massage of the affected joints, liberal and free circulation, and a reasonable amount of rest. All of these measures, however, no matter what we pay for them or from what source we procure them, are comparatively futile unless they have a foundation of diet to support them.

Another condition which arthritis victims should understand: that it has taken them many years to develop the favorable environment, and more years to actually acquire the disease. It is unreasonable and stupid to expect an overnight cure. Any drug, serum, vaccine or similar concoction warranted to cure arthritis in this overnight fashion can generally be labeled a fraud. It is discipline and long enduring training along the lines I have suggested which will yield results.

First you will note a gradual disappearance of the pain. The joints themselves will not grow smaller. Once the bone tissue of the joint is permanently enlarged, it will remain so throughout life, for the bony enlargement will not recede. The progress and development of the disease can be curtailed, the symptoms can be stopped, the patient can be made to feel reasonably comfortable, performing all the common functions of the ordinary everyday existence. This is as much as can be promised in the solution of this disease.

I have a free leaflet on the subject of arthritis which is available to anyone interested, if they will send me a self-addressed stamped envelope and a loose two-cent stamp to defray the cost of printing.

Head Noises

Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

Mother read your article in the Sunday Times Magazine on "Head Noises." She has been troubled for about a year with the same symptoms. Her doctor told her sometime ago she did not have high blood pressure and did not need to worry about having it, but we feel sure she is suffering from that ailment.

She has had two very acute pains in the back of the head and neck that have lasted several days. She is never free from head and ear noises.

Mother is sixty-three. What diet should she follow in a case of high blood pressure?

If you have a pamphlet on high blood pressure and diet to follow, would appreciate your sending it in the enclosed stamped envelope. Thank you.

Very truly, A READER.

Here is a case of a 63-year-old woman who is suffering from a symptom found at her period of life as well as associated with many diseases.

The tendency of the tissues and bones is to develop more hardness and brittleness while the flexibility and elasticity of the body is destroyed.

Hearing is accomplished through the vibrations of sound waves against the tympanum membrane which stretches across the internal ear. When this becomes hard and inflexible head noises result.

At the age of 63, not only has the entire body generally undergone a certain degree of degeneration, but also elasticity of the flexible membranes has been partially destroyed. With some, this loss of flexibility merely shows itself as a slight impediment of hearing. With others, it may be accompanied with inflammation or catarrh, particularly where there has been a long, past history of nose and throat troubles.

I can see no reason for doubting the doctor's statement that a high blood pressure condition does not exist. It is certainly simple enough to determine blood pressure. The chances are that the head noises are catarrhal in origin. Hence, I would recommend that the writer, in addition to procuring my leaflet on high blood pressure, which would probably be an essential, also write for the leaflet on catarrh.

Neuritis

Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

Will you please send me a diet for a person who has neuritis in the chest and limbs. My friend sent for a diet and it helped her so much. We heard of you through The Times.

Very truly, A READER.

The fact that we use a drug for every medicine leads people to believe that the same specific application of diet can be applied to their troubles.

What shall I eat? I have headache, pleurisy, heart disease, pneumonia, neuritis and anything else.

It seems difficult to realize that to a major extent, diet is a personal equation and particularly the application of diet for specific disease. Seldom, indeed, do we find an isolated symptom and nothing else.

The above patient asks for a diet for neuritis. What else is wrong with her? What is her blood pressure? What does she weigh? What is her age, height and weight? What is her previous history in relation to surgery, medicine, personal habits? What has the diet life been in the past What are the sexual habits?

There is scarcely a question I have asked which is not of paramount importance in addition to the neuritis.

The only thing that I can readily tell her is that neuritis is the cry of pain in the injured nerve. Pain comes from somewhere. We have not done something we ought to do or we have done something we should not do.

That is all neuritis is. I know this—that an injured nerve will not cry out with pain when the eliminating organs are functioning at full capacity; when our habits are not sedentary; when we regulate our sex lives sanely, moderately and intelligently.

I know that it will not come when we carry ourselves correctly, when we have ample sleep, are free from worry and we do not indulge in too much food in general and foods we like in particular.

I know it doesn't come when there are good bathing habits and where we have not stupidly treated previous disease; where we have not applied useless surgery in a futile effort to correct that which our intrinsic faults have been responsible for.

This is what I call sane living. Neuritis is not compatible with it.

When you have it find out wherein you are weak. A simple analysis will readily unfold its story to you.

For relief, correct the cause. For immediate relief get some manipulative treatment. Apply heat measures such as deep therapy light, sun baths, hot packs, etc.; but always delve beneath and continually ask yourself, why? why? why?

The Hysteria of Confinement

Our attitude toward things very largely determines what we get from most of our handicaps or advantages.

One of the fields in which a sound mental attitude yields very fine results is in the conduct of a confinement labor.

I have seen all types of women in the childbirth process and I have noted one outstanding fact.

Ignoring, for the moment, the physiological conditions such as the relative advantage of the woman who has had children before over one who has never had any, I unhesitatingly say that the woman who approaches labor with calm, faith and confidence is at a much better advantage than her sister who is filled with fear, hysteria and dire forebodings.

The hysterical attitude and conduct during labor are the obstetrician's greatest handicaps. The woman doesn't know when to relax nor why. Her muscles are tense. She exhausts herself much more rapidly than the woman not filled with such fears and distortions.

Time and again, the difference between a normal labor and one where the doctor has to interfere with forceps or administer an anesthetic is determined by the woman herself. Her powers of expulsion will fall much sooner if she is

WHAT'S NEW IN SCIENCE

Conducted by Ransome Sutton

Dr. Barnette, Working Under Auspices of Three Institutions and Concluding Twenty-One Years of Experimenting, Proves Magnetic Force is Result of Electron Spinning on Axis—Rockefeller Gives to Scripps School—U.S.C. Students Will Map Subterranean California.

Secrets of Magnetism Production

USING equipment provided by the Carnegie Institution of Washington in a laboratory loaned by the California Institute of Technology, Dr. Samuel J. Barnett of the University of California at Los Angeles has finally found the minute mills which spin out the world's magnetism. More than that, during the twenty-one years he has been working on this one problem, he demonstrated the actual existence of the "whirls of electricity in matter"—presaged by the great French physicist, Ampere, 100 years ago when nothing was known about electrons—and he discovered a new way of magnetizing substances.

Stripped of technicalities, what he found making magnetism is simply a spinning top. He calls it a "spinning electron," but says it behaves almost exactly like the gyroscope tops, with which schoolboys play. Like the earth, however, an electron has two spins: it presumably spins around its proton-sun, and it also spins on its axis. Which spin produces magnetic effects? That question goes to the very heart of the problem.

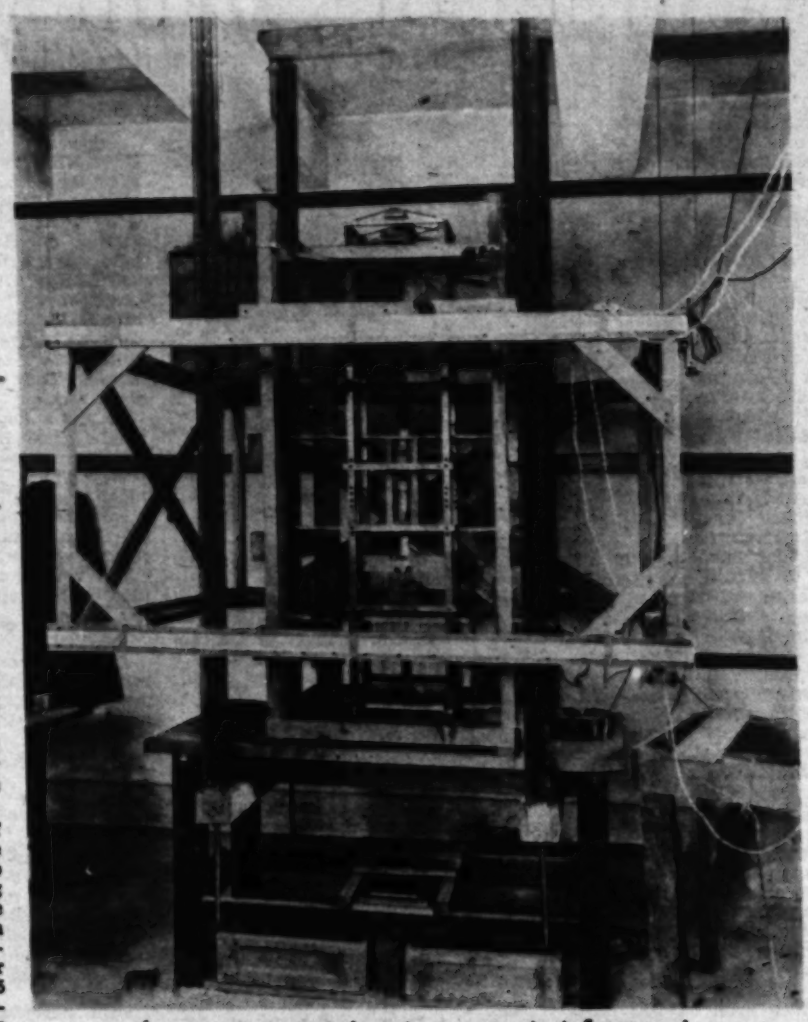
"The results of my experiments all point to one conclusion," Dr. Barnett declared: "It is the spinning of the electron on its axis, and not its revolutions in an orbit, which produces magnetism."

In these concise words, which give a vivid picture of the process, he summarized the outcome of a brilliant series of experiments—expressed mathematically in a queer little equation: "s equals about 1.04 or 1.05 times m/e."

What could be more symbolical of science and of scientific caution? "The 's,'" he explained, "represents the ratio of rotary momentum of the spinning electron to its magnetic moment, 'm' the mass and 'e' the charge of an electron in slow motion," and he was very insistent upon using that word "about;" for the difference between 1.04 and 1.05 times the mass divided by the charge apparently means a lot to him. In the decimal lies a puzzling anomaly, which the doctor has not yet quite worked out. "If the gyromagnetic ratio had come out 2 m/e, one would have been convinced that it is the revolving of an electron in an orbit that creates magnetism," he tried to make plain. "On the other hand, if the ratio had come out m/e, it would be difficult to escape the conclusion that magnetism is produced by the spinning of an electron on its axis. For if the electron were a perfect sphere uniformly charged on its surface, and if it spins on its diameter without distortion, the gyromagnetic ratio would be exactly m/e. The 4 or 5 per cent higher ratio, which I have definitely determined as the outcome of repeated experiments in which possible errors can hardly have exceeded one per cent, results from conditions not yet fully understood, but it strengthens, rather than weakens the conclusion—that the rapid rotation of an electron on its diameter, not its orbital revolutions, produces the magnetic effect."

Dr. Barnett's little equation may not mean much to most readers, but it will be profoundly pondered by those who believe with Einstein that magnetism is one phase of the "force" which holds suns, planets and stars in their places. A mere mathematical formula, it tells nothing of the toil nor of the trials and errors and headaching experiences it took to reach the final result.

The most delicate part of the work had to be done between the hours of one and 4:30 o'clock at night, because disturbances caused by the sun in the earth's magnetic field, as well as vibrations in buildings caused by traffic, are least after midnight. Every possible source of error had to be eliminated somehow, such as tremors in the earth's crust, changes in the length of materials due to magnetization, the tendency of tiny rods to get out of alignment, the difficulty of making small rotors spin symmetrically, and the subtler difficulty of keeping one device from magnetizing other devices. An electric car operating in the neighborhood or heavy vehicle passing by made some of the devices act as if an earthquake were occurring.



Apparatus, protected against magnetic influences, in which Dr. Barnett conducted his principal experiments

To devise the apparatus called for the same order of ingenuity as the experiments themselves required. The piece of apparatus, pictured on this page, is suspended from the ceiling by springs to neutralize quiverings in the building. To neutralize a region inside the apparatus, which would be as free as possible from the earth's magnetic field, the framework was wrapped with three sets of coils, carrying steady electric currents: one to compensate the vertical part of the earth's intensity, one the north and south and the other the east and west component. In this little neutralized region, a sort of tiny neutral island surrounded by an ocean of magnetism, the principal experiments were performed.

Before Dr. Barnett started his work the only known method of magnetizing substances of any kind was to place them within a magnetic field, like that of the earth, or to coil a wire around them and send a current of electricity through the wire. Recalling Ampere's "whirls of electricity," it occurred to the doctor that a rod of iron might be magnetized by merely rotating it. In an inert rod the Amperean whirls, pointing in all directions like nails in a keg, would neutralize each other and account for the rod's apparent lack of magnetism. But, if the rod were rotated, the rotation might make the whirls point all in the same direction, whereupon the rod would manifest the same kind of a magnetic effect as that produced in a rod by encircling currents of electricity. He took an inert rod, rotated it in his little neutralized region, and sure enough! it became a magnet. It was the first time such a "miracle" had ever been performed by man. It was not performed by "man" alone, for Mrs. Barnett, who worked with the doctor through the still hours of every night during those early experiments, helped perform the miracle.

Dr. Barnett at work in his laboratory

What Dr. Barnett asserts has resulted from the whole series of experiments should perhaps be stated in his own words. "The chief results of the investigation," he stated, "are as follows: (1) It revealed an entirely new process of magnetizing substances, that of merely rotating them in a neutral region; (2) it established the actual existence of Ampere's molecular electric currents, previously regarded as hypothetical; (3) it proved that the electricity in motion in these molecular currents is negative, and that it has mass or inertia; (4) it determined with considerable precision the gyromagnetic ratio of the Amperean whirl, or elementary magnet, as somewhat greater than m/e; and (5) in doing these things, it revealed the gyromagnetic anomaly, supporting the scheme of half-quantum numbers—showing that the elementary magnet is not a simple electron orbit as usually considered, and giving great weight to the recent hypothesis that the spinning electron is at least the chief part of the elementary magnet, or foundation unit of magnetism. These results, obtained at different times, have been completely confirmed by recent investigations, conducted along entirely different lines and by wholly different experimental methods."

Asked what the thing called magnetism, which a rotating electron spins out, really is, the doctor shook his head; his experiments had to do with the machine, rather than its product. Everybody knows, however, that a gyroscope top creates a disturbance in the surrounding air similar to a small maelstrom, and one is tempted to speculate that a spinning electron produces an analogous disturbance in the surrounding ether. One trouble with the speculation grows out of the fact that the ether may not exist. On the other hand, space exists, and it is something wherein matter in many forms floats. Where do the light rays go, for example, which are never stopped by objects in the sky? It has been calculated that there is enough lost light within the circle of the Milky Way to constitute 200,000 suns. So space is not empty nothingness; it is something. In it, whatever it may be, whether we call it "ether" or something else, Dr. Barnett's spinning electrons apparently create tiny fields of disturbance, and we call those fields "magnetic fields"—collectively, the greatest power in the universe.

worms in your book, but what you say seems to apply to older children.

I don't know whether to go right away to a specialist or not and really can't because I can't afford it. I am still paying for my baby, as it is.

Any information you can send me will certainly be appreciated.

Very sincerely yours,
A READER.

In several previous articles I outlined the general treatment for deworming children. Worms, or parasites in a seven-months child are not frequently encountered. One might go through ten years of practice and not find a case as early as this.

Most of the time, worms start from the age of two and upward. True enough, one could not apply strictly the same measures for a seven-month child as one would for a five-year-old. The digestive system is too delicate, its possibilities of harm too great. Further, infants do not take vermifuges (deworming substances) very successfully.

It makes them sick and between the presence of the worms and the taking of the vermifuges, I do not know but that in some cases I would choose the worms. About the best thing one can do in such circumstances would be to eliminate the milk feeding for one entire day.

Instead, give the child all the orange juice he can take whenever he can take it. Of course, he will be a hungry child, but one day will not seriously matter. Then give him a small dose of a mild cathartic as senna tea, cascara or licorice, approximately one-quarter of what you would give an adult.

In addition to his regular bowel movements, whether they be two or three for the day, give him a series of warm, high enemas. This will generally succeed in cleaning the lower bowel, while the pressure of forced peristalsis will be effective in driving the worms and parasites downward. I am confident that the specialist, if she visited one, would give her advice of a similar order, except that he would perhaps advise a worm medicine in addition.

I hope that ere long she succeeds in paying for her baby and gets her final bill of sale so that she may call it her own, financially as well as materially.

Causes and Cures for Arthritis

If we intelligently believe the laws of cause and effect, we are not unreasonable in assuming that every disease must have its forerunning favorable conditions. This we term in technical language, the etiology or background which fosters its development. In other words, before any condition of pathology can develop in the human body, the tissues must be favorably conditioned. Hence a summary of those elements causative of arthritis should be understood so that those suffering can apply the remedies, and those in the primary stages can forestall the later disastrous consequences.

As we analyze the problem in its later stages, we see a condition in the body where auto-intoxication plays the prime role. The joints are swollen as a result of some irritation in the membranes adjacent to them. This irritation in its turn unquestonaby comes from the blood stream, for the nutrition to every cell of the body originates from this source.

The deposit of toxins occurs as a consequence to our dietetic habits which invariably are associated with what we term the great American diet—the characteristic meat, soup, potatoes, coffee and pie regime. There is scarcely an item in this vast field of diet which does not carry with it some form of corruption, refinement and the addition of chemicals or preservatives, or the destruction of the vital ingredients, the essential vitamines and mineral salts. As a consequence, the ingestion of these foodstuffs means that the body metabolism is robbed of its essential salts as well as the calcium, potassium, magnesium and a very small quantity of iron.

Thus we can truthfuly say that the backgrounds of arthritis are mineral and vitamin starvation, even though the patient has partaken superficially of sufficient nourishment. Weight may be ample, muscular development symmetrical, and the external appearance fine—yet the body chemistry inevitably tells its disastrous story.

I have never seen a case of arthritis—

Art Treasures of World Meet in El Paseo de la Guerra

Santa Barbara's "Street of Spain"

By Lannie Haynes Martin

RIGHT on the very spot where a primitive corn-grinding stone once stood, where a huge soap kettle bubbled and tall tallow candles cooled slowly in their crude tin molds, there now stands a picturesque colony into which the world pours the varied art treasures of the past and present.

Santa Barbara calls it "El Paseo de la Guerra" and the "Street of Spain," but it is really a little cosmopolis with the potteries, textiles, paintings, jewels, metal work, glassware, flowers and shrubs, furniture and fashions of the whole wide world.

In 1806 just 124 years ago, Don Jose Antonio Julian de la Guerra, a young Spanish lieutenant, was sent from the City of Mexico to Santa Barbara. There he met the beautiful Dona Maria Antonia Juliana Carillo, only daughter of Don Raimundo Carillo, and a romance ensued which made history and founded the famous house of De la Guerra in California.

In 1815 Don Jose was made Commandante of the Presidio of Santa Barbara and held that important office until he resigned in 1842. During that time, with the aid of Indian labor, he built the picturesque, rambling adobe house with its various extensions, its patios, trellises and spacious porches. So well was it built that it has withstood the ravages of time and is now the most beautiful part of the art colony which has sprung up around it, imitating its simple lines and sharing in the atmosphere which it has created.

In the old wine room, where Don Jose and his descendants stored their choice muscatels, and rare old brandy, there are now tables of mist-blue Mexican glass, gay potteries from Guadalajara and brilliant serapis. Not far from it, in a studio which has cleverly copied the primitive architecture, are antique Chinese vases, Japanese priest's robes and huge Italian jars. Czecho-Slovakian dishes stand side by side with Russian samovars and old English pewter jugs and platters. Spanish shawls, southern colonial bedspreads, East India prints, tapa cloth, Paisleys and Danish homespun hang in harmony on the old adobe walls and make a colorful picture.

Out in the flagstone-paved patio little groups sit at tea in the afternoon, shaded by Bagdad awnings, surrounded by flowering shrubs and bathed in an atmosphere of beauty and romance which only such historic ground could materialize.

In one wing of the adobe structure, behind a weather-beaten door marked "No Admittance," there still lives one descendant of the famous Don. She is Miss Emilia de la Guerra, grand-daughter of the founder of the house. The writer was allowed to walk through the spacious living-room and dining-room and view the walls covered with oil portraits of beautiful Spanish ladies, to sit on the hand-carved mahogany chairs with their well-preserved haircloth coverings and to handle some of the precious china and curios that have been in the family for generations.

De la Guerra was a proud name long before Don Jose came to these shores and a picture of the ancestral mansion in Spain, built in 800 A.D., hangs on the wall. A strange transition came over Miss de la Guerra when she admitted the visitor beneath her roof. When addressed in the patio and asked if a story might be written around her romantic home she was extremely reserved, reticent and unresponsive, but when she unlocked the door to her own quarters, she reverted to the Spanish grand dame with the proverbial hospitable, gracious manner, making the guest feel welcome and at home.

"Our home," said Miss de la Guerra, "was like a patriarchial establishment. The various branches of the family lived in De la Guerra house in love and harmony and I have frequently seen thirty people sit down at the table, just on ordinary occasions, with no guests present. Where the main business houses of Santa Barbara now stand we had our green vegetable gardens, but the corn and other grain, as well as many of the staple vegetables, were brought from the various ranches owned by the family. The ranch at San Julian was eleven leagues and the one at Simi twenty-two leagues."

When one remembers that a land league in those days measured more than two and one-half miles, the vast extent of these old Spanish grants can be approximately conceived. There were many smaller ranches, Tapo being mainly a vineyard, the wine from which won first prize in the Philadelphia centennial, in 1876.

"Back of the main house, in the patio where tea is now served there was a huge mill for grinding meal and flour. There was a gigantic iron soap kettle and a mammoth brick oven where hundreds of loaves of bread were baked each week, for my grandfather supplied the needs of almost the entire community. They had to make their own tallow candles, their only source of illumination at that time; and they ground the cocoa beans brought from Mexico to make the chocolate.

"The first piano ever brought to Santa Barbara came to our house. But before that we had a 'seraphine,' a small, portable organ which the young men of the house carried round from ranch to ranch to serenade the young ladies to whom they were paying suit. Always there was music and dancing and happiness in those days. Doors were not locked and people were kindly and generous."

Many beautiful mosaic tiles, commemorating historic events or the visits of celebrities, are set into the outer walls of the adobe structure that houses the artistic colony. One of the most interesting of these is the Dana marker, in commemoration of the visit of Richard Henry Dana, who visited the de la Guerra mansion in 1836 and described some of the festivities in his book "Two Years Before the Mast."

This colorful tile is about three feet square and has the reproduction of a three-masted schooner with sails bellying in the wind. There is a tile bearing a Spanish coat of arms and a long inscription in memory of the visit of the Duke of Alba, and another to mark the visit of the Marquis of Viana. The latter carries an autograph of the Marquis in which he lauds Bernhard Hoffmann, the chief promoter of the project, calling him "worthy champion of Andalusian architecture and historic memorials."

It is Mr. Hoffmann's belief that this successful restoration of an early California hospitality-center will result in the entire State awakening to the historic treasures that abound within its borders, and that each community will begin to preserve and to restore the many historic shrines that are now neglected and in ruins; Los Angeles having already fulfilled his prophecy in the opening of the picturesque Paseo in Olvera street, which in a few years will no doubt rival the famous Santa Barbara colony.

The artistic Santa Barbara colony is a unique reversal of the old saying "where commerce leads, art will follow," for it was the picturesque setting of the place which first inspired the architects and builders of the little shops to turn it into a market place for the beautiful wares and fabrics of other lands.

New Yorkers call it the "Western Greenwich Village," travelers from the Orient speak of it as a "bazaar," but the old Spanish residents still think of it as a shrine and love every old time-worn tile, every crumbling adobe brick because they hold memories of a period, which, to them, was the most beautiful in all the world.

One of the most typically Spanish features of the place is the great number of tropical plants, shrubs and flowers growing in earthenware pots and these with the palm, pepper and olive trees which cluster about the walls have a magic all their own to take the fancy back to early days.

The wrought iron grill work, balustrading and lighting fixtures are also unusually effective and add much to the artistic harmony of the rambling, winding, intriguing structure whose shadowy arcades lead into sun-flooded courts and stone-paved or grassy patios, or into huge wooden-beamed rooms, each holding a surprise of beauty.

An art gallery is housed in the very center of the colony where exhibits of oils, pastels and water colors are held each month, and frequently the work of the most famous artists in the country can be seen there. Bookshops, with the very latest works of the world's intelligentsia, cater to an ultra-intellectual group and Santa Barbara is reputed to be one of the most highbrowly-bookish communities in the country.

The gardens of Santa Barbara are famous the world over for their beauty and for the variety of tropic and exotic flowers and shrubs that grow and mingle with the native plants and trees, and their charm has become known through the unique "gardens tours," inaugurated a few years ago, by the society women of Montecito, a fashionable suburb of Santa Barbara; the entire proceeds from the admission charge for seeing the gardens being given to charity.

Besides the private gardens, there are many colorful spots of enchantment, with extensive water gardens, lily ponds and flower-bordered vistas. All of these bits of wonderland have been pictured by the artist, either with the camera's eye or the brush, and hang somewhere on the walls of El Paseo, in the little street of Spain.

DOMAIN

By Fiswoode Tarleton

THE old spyglass shows Talt Allen the two wild hogs coming out the high beechwoods atop the gap, the only movement in the wild and primitive landscape. He turns the glass on the gap itself, the only inlet to his domain, the domain of the Allens. Grim, forbidding land. Pretty soon he looks around at his two boys; watches them feed the fire under the still. Corn going into liquor and Talt on the lookout for folks coming through the gap, his sharp memory and quick hunter's eyes ready to size up strangers or hillmen belonging to his own Meddlesome Creek country.

Everybody coming through the gap stands out plain to Talt Allen. Hillmen astride mules loaded with sacks of grain, grain-corn bound for a secluded mountain still. Sometimes a dry-land sled drawn by two mules and loaded with fire-coal from a high, mountain mine. Hillmen afoot, armed with rifle-guns, out to hunt squirrels. Folks returning from Milk Sick Cove or Pennyroyal settlement farther down on Meddlesome. Hill boys trailed by lean hounds with tight bellies. Wandering cows and steers and sows with their young.

And as figures appear Talt Allen says to himself more than to his boys:

"Hit's Matt Meadows fotchen' shoats. Mose Morgan air right smart steppin.' Kid O'Gowd's boy air fotchin' ca'tridges from Pennyrile, I reckon."

When their pappy speaks, the boys, Anse and Abe, pay no attention but continue feeding the fire mechanically. Chips off the old block, new editions of their pappy, they sometimes rise to stretch, move their Winchester guns a little nearer them and then go on with their duties. Anse, the older of the boys, the immage of his pappy, sometimes rises and steps over to his pappy for a peep through the old glass, then sits down in silence.

Like his pappy, Anse knows every isolated soul in his district. Knows everybody who comes through the gap by sight. Knows peace officers from Pennyroyal settlement, from Leeston, the county seat; even from Anathoth, the railroad town, far beyond across a score of mountains.

The sticks under the still continue to crackle while Talt Allen rests his spyglass in the fork of a sapling and watches. Old spyglass handed down by his great grand-pappy, old seaglass that landed at Jamestown with his forbears shows him the expression of every face pushing ahead through the gap; shows him almost the hairs on every mule and wild hog.

The gap, the narrow defile dividing two great ridges, is the only gateway to the Allens, the only approach that needs watching. On all other sides precipices, laurel hills laced with the tearing, merciless greenbrier. Perpendicular fields sowed in corn and beans. Cold spring water flowing endlessly from the rocks ten paces from his cabin door. Power strengthened by five generations since Dan Boone's time. Independence. A monarchy in which Talt Allen rules. Master of his soul and the souls of his woman and boys and girl. The wildest hinterland in Appalachia. A fortress built by nature. Talt Allen's domain.

When Talt looks through the glass again he sees a wild boar-hog with white shining tushes coming through the gap. Thin like a deer. Braver than a bear. More vicious and dangerous than a catamount. A menace to hillmen. Menace even to armed hillmen because they do not dare kill the wild boar of the Allens. Men and boys climb trees and pull themselves up the ledges when they meet this boar in the gap. Some hang their legs out of reach for hours, waiting for the boar to wander off.

Talt Allen with the eyesight of an eagle, the hearing of a dog, the instinct of a wild beast knows that his woman is approaching now from the cabin beyond the still. Knows she's coming down trail, not with the ax this time to get firewood, not with the hoe to work the corn, not with the buckets to get water, but empty handed. Coming special. Talt keeps his eyes to the old spyglass. Keeps her waiting as she approaches and stands silently back of him, waiting his pleasure to speak. She's observing a ritual. A ritual enforced by Talt's pappy and grandpappy and great-grandpappy before him. Custom of kings. So that Talt's authority shall be maintained and respect held strong he continues to look through the glass for some minutes. His eyes sweep the high ridges and the gap over and over again while his woman waits.

He is conscious of his two boys looking at him, waiting for him to speak to their maw. When he lowers his glass he puts it under his arm. He breaks off a piece of twist tobacco and fills his mountain clay pipe.

"Wal," he says, looking around at his woman.

She folds her hands across her stomach and looks at her boys as she answers her man.

"Barbara air gone."

Talt loads his pipe and shows no change of expression. The boys glance at him, wait again for him to speak. Like their maw they wait on him.

When he gets his pipe going, Talt takes another look through the spyglass. Watches a hillman coming through the gap. Sees the hillman turn sharply and go back as he sights the wild boar.

"How Barbara git away?" Talt asks at last with a brittle, hard stare at his woman.

She tells him that their girl, Barbara, got away by stuffing her cot-bed full of mule harness and quilts. Built up the bed to look as if she were sleeping in it.

Never went to bed though, but sneaked away under cover of night while her pappy and brothers and maw slept. Talt's woman tells him these things in the slow unemotional voice of the hills, and she tells him almost in a whisper that their gal took along her "tafferter" dress and her shoes and stockings.

Talt, his woman, and his two boys glance at one another. The woman stands immovable. The boys, seeking escape from their pappy's hard eyes, begin to feed the fire again. Talt rolls the old spyglass over and over in his hand. Casualness and unconcern work into their faces, but, way down in them all, something stirs and pricks and tosses, and struggles to rise. Struggles vainly to disturb their poise, their dignity, their pride.

A strange heat is mounting to the head of Talt Allen as he sees that what they all have feared has really come to pass. His girl Barbara, Barbara Allen, named after the old song, proud girl of his name, running away to hitch with a foreigner, an outsider, a man out of her district. All his objections to Bud Falloway stand out clear in Talt's mind, seem to pass before him in dreadful review. The Falloway habit of trying to run the whole Cumberland country.

"Huh! Squirrels, I wonder what you'd have if you shot a squirrel with that gun"

Their growing power. Their refusal to sell their grain to those who make liquor. Their heavy endowments to settlement schools in the mountains and their bringing in of lowland—foreign—teachers.

On top of all these things, thickening like scum, is the galling thought that his gal is lost to him. Folks are going to say in the settlement and from the backs of their mules as they pass in the creek-bed road that his, Talt Allen's power, is weakening; that a Falloway took his gal from under his nose. Knowing the steep trails, the dangerous cliffs and ledges, she stole away at night; left him for an outsider, an enemy to all hill tradtions.

Talt sees a weakening of his power, his domain. Sees absolute disgrace if he allows the girl to stay with the Falloways in their foreign land—the Falloways who are trying to build a road through the hinterland, trying to enforce taxes on hillmen who want only to be left alone. Falloways who bring in the railroads, who go to the Legislature and try to make lowland laws for the highlands.

As he glances at his boys he seems to be trying to read what is in their minds. He knows that if he lets this disgrace of his gal running away pass without notice it may not be long before his boys feel the weakening of their pappy's power. Little by little they will slip away.

With the hard brown eyes of the Cumberlander he seems to pinion his boys. They twitch and lower their eyes to feed the fire.

"Anse," he says sharply, "you-un kin fotch back Barbara."

The older boy of Talt Allen rises slowly, eyed by his brother and his maw. He picks up his Winchester rifle-gun and saunters away amid silence. He enters the mouth of the trail that meanders through the tight laurel and rhododendron, then dips steep and rough to the foot of the ridge and the approach to the gap. Before he disappears from view he turns and has a glimpse of his pappy looking through the old spyglass, his maw brushing her hair from her eyes, his brother feeding the fire.

In the long, regular, springy stride of the hillman he moves on and loses sight of his people. Stopping only once to whip a copperhead snake to death with a branch from a sapling when it defies him on the trail, he reaches the thick timber, close growing beeches that make a curtain to hide his pappy's domain. Tight beech forest that stands like an outer fortification. As he walks, his eyes and ears are alert, sensitive to every movement, knowing instantly what every sound, every movement means. Wild hogs grunt away. Some stop cracking nuts and rooting to stare at him. Some draw their bodies back. Some follow him for a few steps. He goes around a sow with young ones, rather than make her charge. He would have to shoot her if she charged, or have to climb a tree.

Responsibility is upon his shoulders. He is on a hunt for bigger things than hogs. He is empowered with orders from his pappy. Given a command by his pappy, who is king of Meddlesome. He is going to bring back his pappy's gal; going into enemy country.

Leaving the beech woods, he enters the sycamores, another concealment. Then he comes into the open, the exposed approach to the gap from the Allen side. He maintains his pace until he reaches the gap itself, then slows up and half turns to look back and up. He waves a hand. Gesture that he is gone. He knows exactly where his pappy stands. Were his pappy an enemy, were his brother an enemy, he could train his rifle-gun right on their heads, so well does he know the position of his pappy's lookout, high above—above the laurel and the beeches.

When Anse passes through the gap without conflict with his pappy's mad boar-hog, he turns to the left, descends a steep trail that leads down, way down to the narrow valley, to the slow-moving waters of Meddlesome. He begins to hear the faint hum of waters pretty soon, then suddenly above it, the splashing of a mule in the creek-bed road. When he leaves the mouth of the trail and stands on the bank of Meddlesome he looks up and down. Then he sets out, southward, in long strides over the gravel banks, gravel piled down into the ravine by mountain freshets. Rounding a bend, he catches sight of a hillman ahead of him, hillman astride a mule. Mule hanging his head in strange brute dreams. The hillman is bound for Pennyroyal settlement, keeping his eyes on the tops of the sycamores as he rides. On the lookout for squirrels, gathering his supper as he rides to the settlement and back.

Anse lengthens his stride still more as he recognizes Hard Meadowes. Hard, who is never without a rifle-gun, who is always vanquished, though, by Anse at the matches, who is always practicing rifle-gun fire along Meddlesome. It has been a long time since Anse attended these Sunday morning shootings. It has been a long time since the Milk Sick Cove men have seen him. He has had to lie low for a long time. Drives by the prohibition and revenue men kept the Allens bottled up for months, bottled up until he, Anse, lost the habit of matches.

And now as he takes up the gap between him and the hillman he feels the need of making another show of his prowess, fresh evidence that Allen genius for sure shooting has not lessened during the months. In this land where a man-child is born to the rifle-gun, where men decapitate turkeys at a hundred yards, the Meddlesome Creek Allens have always carried off honors. But now—now his blood sister, his papy's gal, has left her people, gone at a foreigner's bidding. There is a weakening in the power of the Allens which Anse feels. He feels something has to be mended. Something has got to be strengthened. He sees the first step as he approaches the hillman on the mule.

Care of the Body

Reactions From Sleep

The newspapers have recently announced some interesting observations on a subject as simple as sleep.

In California, it was found out of an observation of several dozen subjects that scarcely two reacted alike. Some were nervous and restless, tossing and fidgeting constantly; others were comparatively quiet. Some breathed stentoriously; others were scarcely audible. Some had nightmares and erotic sensations. Some woke up with deep lines of tiredness under their eyes; others were rested and refreshed, and so on.

We find a variation of experiences differing with each individual. The slight variations have very little effect. It is rather with the major problems that we are concerned.

Where sleep becomes a debilitating, exhausting process—to wake up more tired than when you went to bed—it certainly is no ta healthy symptom. To have erotic losses with their resulting debilitation almost equivalent to unconscious nocturnal masturbation is a condition producing a great loss of energy.

Sleep is the rejuvenator—the rebuilder—of the human body from the wear and tear and excesses that we have committed during the day. All powers of the body should be recharged.

The sensual libertine should recuperate his virility; the victim of digestive incapacity should be partially restored. The fagged and dulled brain powers should be cleared. The weary muscles should be refreshed. From every direction new life should course through the tissues. But unfortunately, this is not so.

One of the most serious of all problems is insomnia—lack of sleep. Physically, it is fraught with great peril. The nervous symptoms which result cannot be overcome in any way except through sleep.

Narcotics and particularly chloral are not only useless, but dangerous. They are habit forming and powerful depressants. It would be better to get at the root causes. Some of these we may discuss here. One of the most important is mental peace. Do not carry your troubles to bed with you. Do not sleep with your woes and anxieties, your discords and disharmonies.

An excellent practice to disengage the mind is to read something while in bed. Do not pick an exciting novel or a vivid, stimulating love scene. Let it rather be something dull or uninteresting, so as to keep the mind unstimulated. The focus of attention on a book is by far the best antidote for nervous restlessness, a discordant, perturbed mind.

Then see that the sewer system of the body is cleaned. Move the bowels, empty the bladder. A warm bath is sometimes highly efficacious.

Ten or fifteen minutes of setting-up exercises will often tire one and make sound sleep possible.

In bed, don't use too many bed clothes. Buy one blanket for $20 rather than ten for the same sum. If you find it difficult to sleep or are restless try sleeping in the nude.

If the stomach is empty, sometimes a glass of milk or an apple before retiring will force the blood from the brain to the stomach. A hot foot bath may do the work as well. Pelvic congestion can usually be relieved by an enema, or two.

If there is leucorrheal irritation, a tepid water douche would be advisable.

Fresh air is essential to the sleeping room. Do not be afraid of a draft. A draft never hurt anyone of itself. Our fears of it are far worse than its harmful potentialities. Be warm, however, even if you must take hot water bottles, an electric blanket or hot bricks to bed with you.

It is inadvisable for the very young to sleep with the old, for instance, mother and daughter. Nor, for that matter, should married couples sleep together throughout the night. It is inadvisable from many standpoints. There is a constant loss of sexual magnetism.

There is also, the repulsive nature of one's personal habits—pyorrhea smells, halitosis, the gaseous fermentation in belching, and the unwashed bodies.

Too intimate a sleeping contact is often destructive of sexual attractiveness between the sexes. Twin beds are a fine modern idea—but still better are twin bedrooms. This not only for the aesthetic but for the physiological reason of sleep and the maintenance of sexual attractiveness to a high degree.

Mental Powers and Food Appetites

The vast quantity of low-grade intelligence easily ascertainable by any educational test certainly has reasons for its existence, outside of mere accident, or, as one educator put it, "The nature of the beast."

It is not by sheer chance alone that intelligence tests reveal the greater proportion of the population having intelligence below an I. Q. equivalent to sixteen years.

We follow in ruts of thought, habits and routines of daily existence which preclude development along original channels in nearly any field. Original thought creations are as scarce as hen's teeth and when they do arrive they are quickly smothered in the vast sea of bigotry and prejudice.

Educators say that the trouble lies with our public schools—that we do not raise the standard of knowledge, training and learning. There is some truth in their case, but like all other individual solutions, it is not sufficiently inclusive.

Unquestionably, our public schools could stand considerable betterment and certainly not to the detriment of our youth.

Sociologists say that the trouble lies in the home training, in the inadequacy of the parent and the lack of training in the field of child raising.

ARE YOU SUFFERING from painful affliction of the feet, broken down arches, callouses, bunions, etc.?

Ready-made Arch Supports are an unsatisfactory makeshift because everyone's foot is different and the displaced bones, enlarged joints and overused ligaments sometimes matters still further. We make supports from carefully prepared plaster of Paris casts and alter them to accommodate changes brought about by the wearing of the supports. In order to give relief and lasting satisfaction it is imperative that the foot be restored to as normal a shape as possible. We have an extensive experience in the correction of flat-foot, broken down arches and other deformities of the foot, and are able to promise our clients comfort and relief in every case.

It is not necessary to wear clumsy shoes with our supports; on the contrary, we often restore daintiness of appearance to feet badly deformed and unsightly.

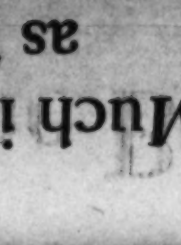
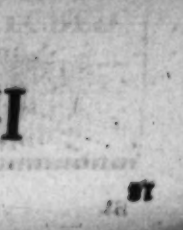
HAS YOUR STOMACH GONE "SOUTH"?



Dr. Percy H. Poole



Dr. Georgean H. Poole

The Physical Culture Magazine for May has an article by James Segall, M.D., which points out the prevalence of low stomach and sagged intestines, and indorses abdominal supports as a valuable measure of relief. Bernarr Macfadden, writing on the subject of low intestines, states that the drag on the nerves tends to lead to paralysis of the nerves supplying the intestines. Dr. Segall is of the opinion estimates that 50% of the people have this condition, is an underestimate.

As we have stated before, it is our firm conviction from experience with thousands of these cases, that maladies such as constipation, sluggish liver, digestive trouble, extreme nervousness, backache and many other ills are unlikely to be permanently corrected by any system of treatment unless the abdominal organs are properly supported. The thousands of patients who are praising Dr. Poole's supports, for the benefits they have given, is evidence of the real merit of this inexpensive measure of relief.

If you are finding it difficult to keep pepped up, or are suffering from impaired body functioning, we urge you to call and talk your case over with Dr. Percy H. Poole or Dr. Georgean H. Poole. There is no charge for consultation or examination. If a support is supplied, the cost will be, unless complicated by rupture, or extra large size, $10.00 or $12.50.

The abdominal organs can be held in a position more favorable to functioning, by using a properly adapted support, and such support can be fitted so as not to interfere with circulation or freedom of muscle action. Unfortunately, all elastic belts, and ordinary store belts and surgical corsets, merely press back and crowd upon the abdominal organs, but the supports adapted by Drs. Poole act like a shelf, which prevents the downward drag, without exerting any pressure upon the turns of the intestines. These supports are especially desirable for people who are thin or have lost weight suddenly. Drs. Poole, Sun Bldg., 706 S. Hill St. Hours 9 to 5. Tuesday and Thursday, 9 to 7:30.

owes, he keeps his eyes on the tree limbs. Pretty soon the corner of this eye is whipped by a gray streak in a sycamore. The throw of the rifle-gun to his shoulder, the report, the thud as the squirrel strikes the ground, are too usual for a hillman to notice. But Anse sees the white mark on the limb where his shot displaced the bark, sees slivers of the bark flutter to earth. He knows without looking back that Hard Meadowes sees and reads. He hears the footfalls of the mule stop and knows that Hard Meadowes is looking at the tree branch in wonderment. Anse knows that to bark a squirrel so quickly, so neatly, hillmen have worked a lifetime. Killing a squirrel without making a bruise on its body. Shocking it to death.

Pretty soon Anse passes hill children who are hunting for crawfish under the rocks in Meddlesome. The boys stare at the big bore Winchester, the girls glance up while they feel under the rocks. Anse's eyes fills for an instant with boys and girls moving their heads together. He knows what they are whispering. They are whispering that he is Talt Allen's boy. Talt Allen's boy! The thought seems to impose a freshening courage. In the hills if a boy's pappy is respected, powerful, feared, his way is made easier. Men bid for his friendship, unless they nurse a deep grudge, unless their own people are equally powerful.

The low laurel along the banks of Meddlesome gives way to the spreading cucumber trees, then to the tulip and dogwood. As Anse turns another bend and is forced to walk in the water, follow the path of the mules, he sees beyond the forms of four hillmen lying on the opposite bank, under a clump of sycamores. As he approaches he hears the voice of one of them speaking loudly, boasting. In a land where men are slow to boast or brag, where they are cautious about voicing their prowess, the voice of the one who brags under the sycamores seems like a discord, a false note in the hills. The talk nettles Anse before he can make it all out, before he has a good look at the owner.

Walking slowly so he can hear, and leaving the water for the bank, he passes the four with a nod.

"I shore flung-fotched 'at baby ter earth, I'm a-tennin' yer. When it comes ter throwfightin' I haint a-taking' off my hat ter any man. I heerd 'at Pennyrile billy jes' cain't move his ol' bone-jints since this-un bangthrowed him. Huh. Ef yer want ter see wrestle-fightin' yer oughter jine Navy. 'At's whar yer kin see wrestlin'. On fightin' ship. Man cain't find peace lessen he fightthrow ever' man on ship. Geeamighty!"

Anse throws a quick glance at the spouting hillman. Recognizes him. Ked, one of the Ferris boys from across the big mountain, from Duckhead Creek district. First cousin to the three Taney boys who lie with him under the sycamores. Ked Ferris, who has been coming over to Pennyroyal settlement on Saturday evenings and throwing men under the porticos; Ked, who breaks up Baptist prayer meetings on Wednesday evenings.

Ked Ferris rises to his elbows and looks Anse over.

"Don't yer git scairt," he says to Anse. "Hain't agoin' hurt yuh none."

The Taney boys poke Ked with their boot toes, try to silence him, as Anse hesitates some feet away. Ked's kin show concern in their eyes and squirm. But from the lips of the hillman who joined the Navy come more words. Corn liquor is talking in him, flaying the Pennyroyal and the Milk Sick Cove men. Big talk about winning bouts in the Navy, and over at the coal mines on the railroad. Ked brags about never being "throwed," and about tossing niggers into the sea right and left as quick as he saw them on the docks at Suez, which is a place the Meddlesome Creek men never even heard of.

Anse takes a step onward. He is on a mission for his pappy and cannot afford to waste time here. But coming over him suddenly is the disturbing thought that if he goes on, if he seems to be walking away from trouble, this Ked Ferris will spread around the report that he, the boy of Talt Allen, was afraid of him. His pappy's power and prestige needs to be bolstered up, not weakened. So Anse stops and looks around again at the Duckhead ex-sailor.

"By doggies!" says Ked. "Ef he jes' haint acourtin' trouble!"

Leaning his rifle-gun up against a sycamore Anse waits for Duckhead man to rise and come for him. He watches the ex-sailor go through the antics and motions of professional wrestlers; Anse's arms, though hanging by his sides, are ready as Ked crouches and stoops and makes feints for his body. When Ked suddenly gets a hold on Anse's waist and his hands slide under his armpits for a neckbreaking hold, Anse comes to life. His knee strikes Ked's belly like a ram, doubles up the Duckhead man, jacknifes his body. The power in a leg that takes an Allen over a high mountain as easily as on the level creekbed road would double up Samson himself, let alone a man whose wind is sapped by corn liquor. Ked Ferris, a showman; Ked, whose imported tactics to use against hillmen born to rough and tumble fighting and wrestling, yells foul. Yells between intakes of breaths that Anse would be mobbed in the Navy. But the cry of foul in the hills is the cry of defeat and fear. In a land where give and take as things come, where all may gouge and kick, as well as hit, the excuse of Ked Ferris makes Anse smile.

"Huh," says Anse, picking up his rifle-gun. He walks off, continues on down Meddlesome.

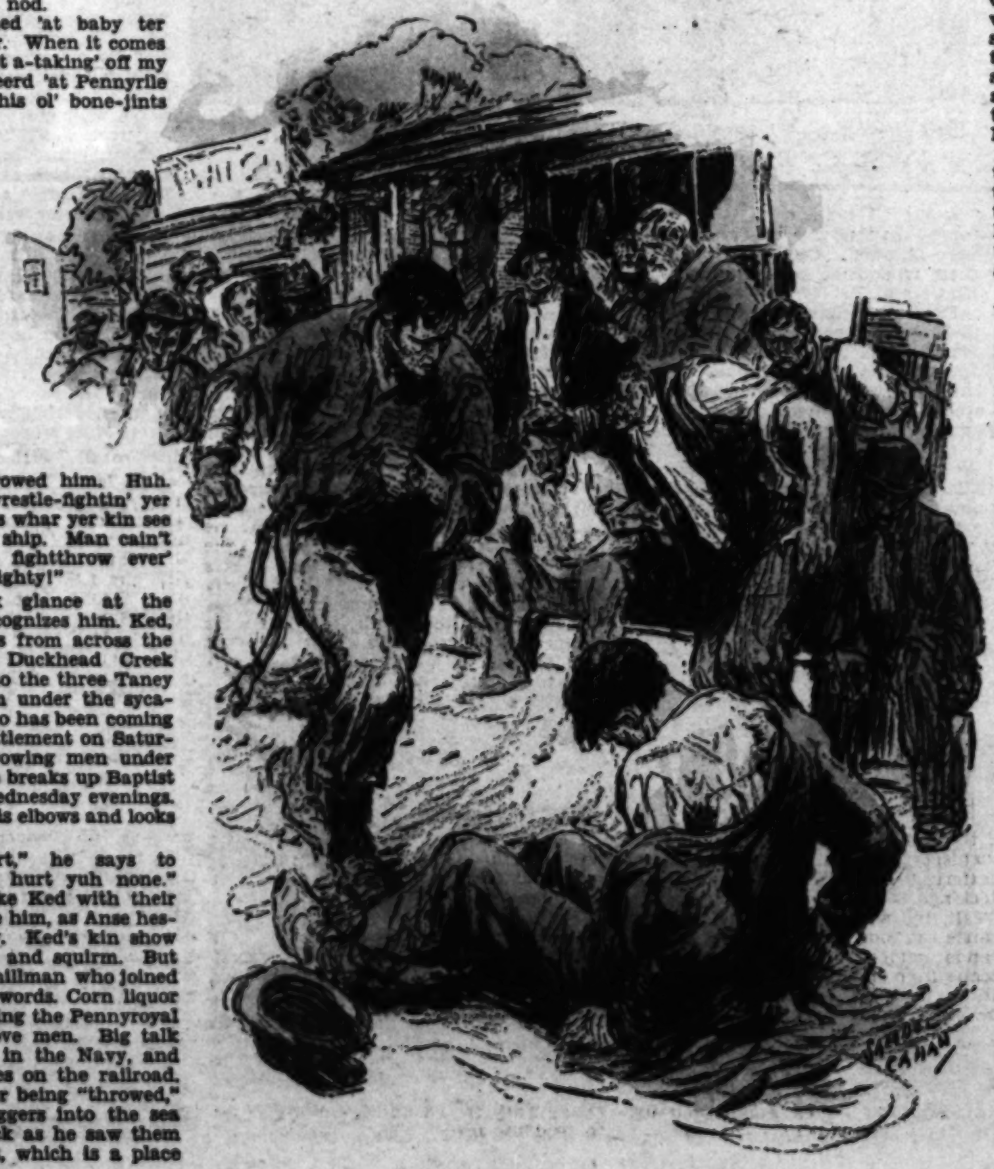
No trace of emotion, no thrill in his senses, no inclination to strut or show effects of victory attend him as he travels in his long strides along the creek-bed road. A severely simple satisfaction, a cold passionless realization that he has kept up the prestige of the Allens, and is equal to emergencies, possesses him for a minute, then is suddenly checked. He downs the pride he is feeling. Way down in the highland soul there is a spot where the highlander shuts out, locks up, his pride. A spot way down in him where affection, pride, even hate have become inarticulate through repression.

Anse moves on bravely, determinedly to a goal, conscious of power, conscious of his pappy's domain back there resting on a trust, a trust that he, Anse, the boy of Talt, will bring back the runaway girl, the only girl of the Meddlesome Creek Allens.

Oddly, as he leaves the creek-bed and cuts over a low hill to save a quarter mile, he thinks of the death of his grandpappy. It is brought to his mind by a certain lay of the land, a certain spot cleared around some laurel, just like the place where his grandpappy was plugged by a revenue man, while he, Anse, a child, was forced to look on. And thinking about his grandpappy brings Anse's mind to a book, one of the three books, mildewed and torn and yellow, that lie on the shelf in his pappy's house.

One of his grandpappy's three books there were brought over by his pappy or grandpappy, brought over from some far country across the sea, brought over by Anse's ancestors who had to leave the far country long ago. A king turned the screws tight on Anse's people way back in time, tax burdened them to death almost, and so they had to leave.

This is the Thirteenth of the Series of Sixteen Best Short Stories; Selected by the Editor of Adventure Magazine.



Jabe cannot avoid the rush of Anse's body, the swing of the Meddlesome Creek man's arm that lays him down

Anse recalls carrying the book to the school teacher at Milk Sick Cove one time. The school teacher, a highlander with great learning, said:

"Way back in time, way back when rifle guns were unknown and families had to set up walls around their homes, way back when right was might and power was virtue, and chiefs had to fight all their lives to keep their domains secure, men carried off women that took their fancy. Chiefs captured the women of other domains and brought them to their feudal castles. This book," the school teacher went on, "is about a girl that was carried off. Her people tried to get her but they couldn't. In those days virtue was power, you see."

Over the low hill, and meeting Meddlesome again as he goes down the other side, Anse, the boy of Talt Allen, experiences, thus, a lapse of mind. Through the thick, laurel covered trail that follows the creek-bed, he moves mechanically. The baying of a hound brings his mind back to the present, detaches it from the hazy land across the sea, where men ride hazily with women slung across their saddles.

It has been a long time since Anse was in Pennyroyal settlement. His settlement is Milk Sick Cove. His pappy's stronghold is nearer the cove than Pennyroyal. Seems to him now that the country grows meaner and less attractive as the valley widens and the hills draw back, ugly and bare with their timber cut, and bristling with stumps. He begins to meet hillmen riding mules. After a while he passes the mail wagon pulled over the rough creek-bed road by two mules. The mail boy and two passengers wave at him, then suddenly clutch the sides of the seats as the wagon strikes a boulder and almost upsets.

Anse glances up at the sun. Sees that the morning is going fast and again increases his stride. Far beyond Pennyroyal is the home, the land of the Falloways. Anse's mind puzzled over his sister getting away, but is still more puzzled over how she happened to make up with a Falloway.

This is the mystery that fills his mind. Where there are good men in her own district, when her own cousin, the school teacher, Noah Allen, wanted to hitch with Anse's sister, why did she make up with a foreigner? His sister begins to stand out more and more as a traitor, a traitor to the Allen clan. And Anse's resolve to bring her back becomes stronger as he leaves the creek-bed and climbs the bank and finds himself at the end of Pennyroyal's main street.

Slowing down, Anse's eyes sweep the town as he walks down the mud road to the business stores. Before he reaches the porticos his eyes have placed every hillman and hill woman who sits under the porticos or leans against the business store walls and hitching racks.

Anse draws eyes as he steps under the first portico and leans against its post. He sees that his presence makes whisperings. Men shift and watch him from under their wide brimmed hats. Some speak. Some nod. One waves feebly from across the road.

Anse watches him saunter slowly up to the harness shop, then cross the road, whistling to himself. Anse feels rather than sees the young hillman approaching him. Without looking Anse knows the hillman is leaning against a post near him and whittling nonchalantly. He is not surprised when the hillman steps over to him and says in a whisper:

"Hain't yer Talt Allen's boy?"

Anse turns his face for a look at him. Sees he is one of the Farrel boys from Duckhead Creek.

"Reckon I air," says Anse, and looks across the mud road again. He waits for the man to go on.

"Wal," says the Duckhead man at length, "this mawnin' I war fotchin' shoat uptrail an' seed yore pappy's girl mulin' hit with Bud Falloway through Pennyrile. Seed 'em from yander hilltop. Ol' fire-ball jes a-comin' up when this-un seed 'em."

While the informer whittles and glances at Anse now and then out of the corner of his eye, while men whisper under the porticos and business store men come to their doorways to watch, Talt Allen's boy senses that every man in town, every woman, every boy under the porticos knows what is up. But Falloway, from the land of the Falloways across mountains, has defied Anse's pappy; his own gal has defied him. The news has already spread in the settlement and along Meddlesome. Folks have something to wonder and think about.

DOMAIN

THE old spyglass shows Talt Allen the two wild hogs coming out the high beechwoods atop the gap, the only movement in the wild and primitive landscape. He turns the glass on the gap itself, the only inlet to his domain, the domain of the Allens. Grim, formidding land. Pretty soon he looks around at his two boys; watches them

"Anse," he says sharply, "you-un kin fetch back Barbara."

The older boy of Talt Allen rises slowly, eyed by his brother and his maw. He picks up his Winchester rifle-gun and saunters away and silence. He enters the mouth of the trail that meanders through the tight laurel and rhododendron, then dips steep and rough to the foot of the ridge and the approach to

PARALLELS---Ancient and Modern

By Philip Johnston

Left: Topographical map of section of Nippur of 2700 B. C. on a clay tablet. Right: Modern topographical map of section of San Fernando

A CITY of the dead, a vast collection of stark ruins that are being slowly uncovered by Kurdish laborers—such is the once proud city of Nippur, the erstwhile mistress of the Euphrates, a center of culture and learning three thousand years before Abraham drove his flocks into the Land of Canaan. And, as its streets, palaces, temples and dwellings—believed to be among the very oldest in the world—emerge from the dust of five millenniums, they yield many treasures of the most antique arts, and inscriptions that represent all phases of life in ancient Babylonia.

A veritable treasure trove to the archaeologist versed in cuneiform decipherment, Nippur also proves interesting to the layman; for its records, its bas relief carving, and its artifacts give us a vivid picture of life in an ancient city. And, if this picture shows strange contrasts with modern times, it also reveals parallels that are startling.

Comfort and security, as well as convenience and proximity to markets for labor and produce—these have from earliest times been the desiderata of the urban. And while city life has provided them in varying degrees of abundance, it has also imposed certain definite restrictions, and has introduced problems that the citizen must solve either in person or through a representative. Some of these problems have to do with the conquest of natural barriers, or the restoration of nature's balance which man has upset; others deal with the human equation; and the methods employed in their solution have seen but little basic change since the days of Nippur. It is, therefore, unusually interesting to make comparisons between that necropolis of the tawny Mesopotamian desert—possibly the world's oldest city—and Los Angeles, one of its newest cities.

Thick deposits of silt made the Euphrates Valley ideal for agriculture; but when settlements reached the estate of towns, and those towns became cities, the alluvium proved very undesirable for streets. Each season of rain would see the thoroughfares all but impassable with heavy gumbo mud, a condition which could be remedied only by paving. The only material at hand for such a purpose, was the silt itself made into bricks, and laid over the street.

No doubt the first pavement was not entirely satisfactory. The abrasion of traffic, as well as the action of the elements, served to disintegrate the bricks of which it was composed. Experiments were made in the manufacture of bricks for this purpose, and when good methods were discovered, they were prescribed for all public work of this character. Then arose a problem of administration—the control of such manufacture, in order that the citizens might be assured of honest workmanship. For this purpose the King—who was Mayor, City Council and judge combined—appointed inspectors to see that the rules and regulations were followed. Each brick made under their supervision was stamped with the King's seal.

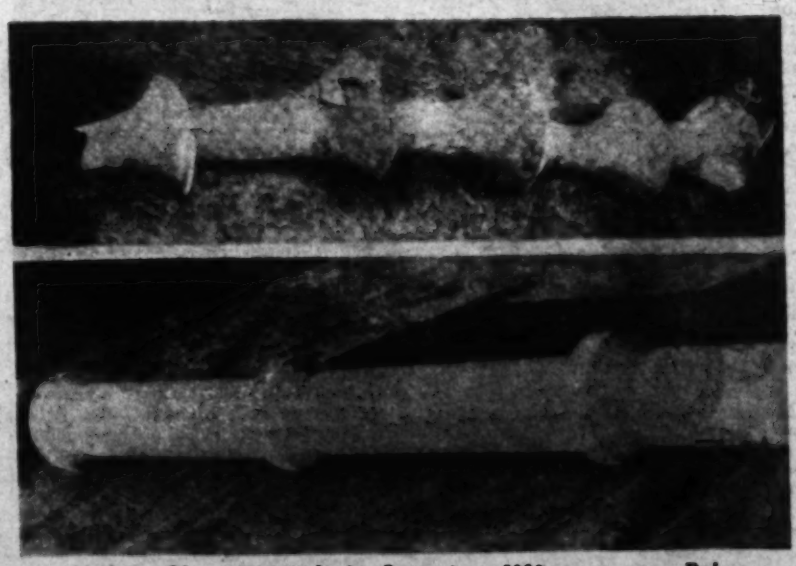
Excavators have uncovered some of these ancient pavements in Nippur, and found on their bricks the seals of kings, once mighty, whose names have long since passed into oblivion. Often they are found one above the other, with thick strata of earth between, proving that centuries elapsed between the laying of each. Several feet beneath the ruins of a large fortress, presumably built by Romans or Parthians, lay the pavement of King Ashurbanipal, who reigned from 668 to 626 B.C. Two feet below this pavement another was discovered, with bricks that bore the seal of King Kadashman-Turgu (1325 B.C.) and still lower a third pavement was discovered which belonged to King Ur-Nineh (2550 B.C.) Two feet below this, the excavators found one laid by King Ur Engur, whose date is fixed at 2700 B.C. Most interesting of all, the welter of dust and debris that filled the buildings, yielded the very stamps of terra cotta with which those impressions in the bricks were made.



Above: Clay pipe made by Sumerians 5000 years ago. Below: Modern pipe, used for drainage in Los Angeles. The comparison shows similarity of structure

Today, we find in Los Angeles, as in other cities of our time, the modern prototype of that ancient inspectors' seal—a stamp of rubber with which a mark is placed on concrete pipe, and other products intended for public improvements, which have been made in an approved manner. And the parallel is made even more striking by the fact that this stamp bears the name of the Board of Public Works—a commission charged with the responsibility of public improvement administration which devolved upon the kings of the ancient world.

Contracts were written thousands of years before paper and ink were invented. The scribe of Nippur made use of clay tablets, upon which he indented his strange cuneiform script with a stylus of terra cotta. Documents of today are prepared with greater facility; but the paper upon which they are printed is perishable, either by fire or by age, while the clay tablets of forty centuries ago remain as legible as they were when the last character was indented.

Cartography is one of the oldest of arts. Even primitive man employed it to express his ideas of direction and distance. Inquire road information of an unlettered Indian, and almost invariably he will stoop and trace in the sand a crude but accurate map. The Babylonians, whose culture far transcended that of the Stone Age, were map makers of marked ability. Like the scribes who wrote the various documents of that time, the draftsman platted his map with a stylus upon a wet clay tablet. Subsequently dried and burned in a kiln, they became the most permanent records left by man, even to the present time. For the maps of today, elaborate and comprehensive with their fine detail, are permanent only as long as they are guarded from the elements, yet their points of superiority are many; for what traveler would enjoy the task of carrying a heavy clay tablet to guide him on his vacation tour?

Letter carriers of Nippur must have been men of great strength and endurance, particularly during the season when a large number of letters was transmitted. Each communication on a clay tablet was inclosed in a bulky envelope of the same material, which makes it easy to believe that a messenger of that period was a stevedore as well as an adept at reading poor chirography.

With the primitive methods at their command, the public officials of Nippur succeeded to a remarkable degree in making for the comfort and convenience of its citizens. The pavements of burned brick were a vast improvement over the muddy streets, but they introduced a new and perplexing problem—that of drainage. For the rain water which had formerly been absorbed into the mud, stood in deep pools on the impervious brick surfaces. Engineers came to the rescue with plans for making clay conduits to be placed below the surface of the street, and carry off the water. It was necessary to make this pipe in short lengths, convenient for carrying and laying, and to devise a method for rendering the joints "water-tight." The latter requirement was met by making a ball-shaped flare on one end, while the other end was made straight, enabling the small end of one joint to be slipped inside the maximum width of most of the principal thoroughfares, while many of the side streets were only seven feet in width —narrow alleyways hemmed in by high buildings that shut out most of the sunlight.

"Few of these streets were paved," writes Munro, "and those only in the center." Blocks of stone or slabs of lava were the only available materials for that purpose. From all accounts this pavement was not very durable, and was soon worn into deep ruts. Traffic was forced to turn out into the mud on either side, and the ruts filled with water, which soon became stagnant pools. Then, as now, the mosquito was a pest, and the fevers which it carried took their toll of the population.

Building laws were enacted, and rigidly enforced. Among the Babylonians, as among the Romans, the height of buildings was limited by law, and the height of the walls was made proportionate to the width of the street. Thus, in the fourth century B.C. Babylonians were limited to buildings of five stories, with walls of sun-dried brick that reached a height in many instances of five stories. Owing to flimsy construction they often collapsed, which brought about the enactment of building ordinances. Augustus promulgated a rule that no private structure should be higher than seventy feet, and Trajan tried to lower this limit to sixty feet. Another stipulated that no private dwelling should be more than twice the height of the street width on which it faced. Violations were punishable by fines of one thousand sesterces, which in those days became so numerous that ultimately they outnumbered the citizens by three to one. And when, in the fourth century B.C. Claudius Nero, vast numbers of slaves; and from their enforced labor she obtained the power to drive her galleys of war, to excavate and construct her drainage systems, to quarry stone for her palaces, temples and pavements. Here was an age of luxury and extravagance, of which we have only a faint conception. Rome was the mistress of the world, and the wealth of the world was poured into her lap. Her citizens were the aristocrats of all time. Their wealth was beyond the dreams of avarice. Their luxury was unbounded. Their power was supreme. Their word was law. Their lives were filled with every pleasure that the world could afford. Their slightest whim was gratified. Their every desire was satisfied. Their every need was supplied. Their every want was provided for. Their every comfort was assured. Their every luxury was indulged. Their every pleasure was enjoyed. Their every delight was experienced. Their every thought was a prayer. Their every word was a song. Their every deed was a dance. Their every step was a journey. Their every turn was a discovery. Their every path was a adventure. Their every road was a quest. Their every destination was a goal. Their every arrival was a celebration. Their every departure was a farewell. Their every hello was a welcome. Their every goodbye was a see you later. Their every see you later was a promise. Their every promise was a vow. Their every vow was a commitment. Their every commitment was a responsibility. Their every responsibility was a duty. Their every duty was a honor. Their every honor was a privilege. Their every privilege was a right. Their every right was a freedom. Their every freedom was a liberty. Their every liberty was a justice. Their every justice was a peace. Their every peace was a harmony. Their every harmony was a unity. Their every unity was a love. just to walk up that trail from the gap and take Talt Allen, easy as pie. Wouldn't be anything to it. Hell, no! Sent us right up to get shot."

Hooking his thumbs in his belt, weighed down with his .45 gun, the Federal man looks hard at Anse for half a minute. Scowls at him and lowers the corner of his mouth.

"Never thought I'd lay eyes on you. We're going to look you over. If there's not a stir in this country, I'm another. Hand over that blunderbuss-gun."

"Got a moonshiner," says a voice in the crowd.

"Six bullet holes in his old hat. Count 'em!" says another.

When a hillman is hard-pressed he thinks quickly. He is a strategist born. He can seem dumb, but his eyes are as quick as a fox's. When the Federal man's hand reaches forth to receive the rifle-gun, the big bore Winchester, a voice in the crowd says—

"Those fellows can cut off a turkey's head at a hundred yards."

"Come on, hand 'er over!" says the government man.

Both the prohibition man and the marshal step back as Anse throws up the muzzle of the Winchester and covers him. The marshal tried to edge step by step toward the street, makes a movement toward his hip, but is stopped by Anse's sudden throw of the gun on a line with the town officer's abdomen.

As if from the onslaught of a wave the crowd moves back into two parts, leaving an opening in front of a business store door. From the corner of his eye Anse sees the storekeeper start to close the door and makes a bound for it, reaches the door and turns once more to send the hands of the marshal and the Federal man up. Several others in the crowd throw up their arms.

Backing now, and holding the two officers outside, Anse reaches a rear window. He sees the storekeeper behind the counter, his eyes looking over a bolt of dry goods; sees the faces of the two officers beyond the door and the unmoving life on the sidewalk and the street, the crowd frozen. During the seconds that it takes to back to the window these things fill his eyes. As he throws a leg backward over the window sill, he sees the marshal and the Federal man reach for guns. And he sees another man running forward from the other side of the street, carrying a rifle. He can see the bolt, knows the rifle is one of those far-reaching Mausers. He fires once, bringing down the lamp over the door and sending hands up. The deputy running across the street stops.

The drop from the sill of the back window to the ground is only two feet and Anse, out of the building now and running down a lane, makes for a thicket in front of a house where a woman washes clothes and children play. He gains the far side of the house as the officers come out of the store window and as the crowd peers out of back doors or windows of other store buildings. He crosses the road in front of the house and runs for an elm grove as shouts come. When he reaches the heart of the woods he ducks behind a tree and looks back. Sees the arms of the children and the woman, still pointing in his direction as the officers and the more venturesome of the crowd gather together and talk.

From tree to tree Anse retreats. Sighted by the officers who open fire, he increases his speed. He hears weak thuds of revolver bullets as they strike the trees in his vicinity. When the Mauser begins to crack he becomes more cautious. The bullets from it strike near. One, whistling past his ear, makes him pause behind a large elm tree. Now he sees the posse spreading, making a wide circle around the woods, throwing a cordon. Anse can see the edge of the woods beyond, and in the center of a grove a large blue and white house; big house with porches. Beyond the house the land dips. The tops of the sycamores tell him there is a creek back of the house. There is laurel and there is rhododendron; there is greenbrier. There is cover and the cover is in the direction of Pennyroyal, in the direction of the Meddlesome country, Milk Sick Cove. Home.

Swiftly he thinks of the consequences if he is caught. He has heard of the third-degree methods of Federal men. Heard of prisons and of the long terms given liquor blockaders. He recalls hillmen coming home, shamefaced after their sentences were served. Shamefaced because they had allowed themselves to be taken by outsiders and sent up. These thoughts seem to dwarf the dangers of trying to gain the creek bottom beyond.

The crossing of the fifty yards of clearing between the woods and one of the outbuildings of the big blue and white house seem as nothing compared to going to prison and having to come back some time, a shamed, a defeated man. In his own country capture would be different. The name of Allen means something. The strangeness of this land in which he is now a fugitive grows upon him. A longing grows within him. The fifty yards to the outbuilding is so much nearer home.

Anse, glancing in all directions, sees the cordon swinging around, getting ahead of him. Pretty soon he will be cut off from the creek, from the fastness of the laurel. Once there he has a chance. A hillman in the tight laurel is secure. Thus the boy of Talt Allen makes a run for it. He hears revolver and rifle fire, hears the revolver bullets strike short of their mark in the turf. Hears the singing of the Mauser and getting nearer all the time. Through the open gates of the picket fence he runs. Changes his course suddenly, swerves quickly and makes for the front door of the big blue and white house.

During the seconds that it takes to make the porch, it comes to him that the door was not open when he left the woods. He intended running behind the big house, putting the house between himself and the edges of the cordon of men and gaining the tight laurel by the creek beyond. The door was closed against him like everything else in this unfriendly town, but now it is open. Without knowing why he leaps the steps to the door, drawing rifle and revolver fire. Short range Colt guns thud in the yard behind him, but the Mauser finds his shoulder.

A numbness creeps to his neck, his head. The hallway seems dim and long and the face of his sister Barbara, his pappy's girl, is a picture that lasts only a second before it is blotted out.

Semi-darkness surrounds him. A light flickers beyond him on a table. He watches it. It blinks at him like an eye. He trys to move but is stopped by sharp pains in his shoulder and neck. There is mystery in the corner of the strange room where he lies, a figure in mystery, too, which cannot attach itself to a past. Through half-closed eyes he sees the pictures dimly outlined on the walls around him, the knick-knacks on a table near the lamp, the mirror framed against the wall, the curtains before the windows. It is like the scenes in the picture-papers and books sent his sister and maw by the "cheerful letter" folks up North. The posts of the bed shooting up, the white "kiver" covering him, are like the pictures.

He raises his head a little, bringing pain to his shoulder again, breaking up the mystery in the corner; the figure that stirs from a big chair and comes toward him now, swiftly.

"Air hit a-hurtin'?"

It is his sister, his pappy's gal who speaks, speaks close to him. Barbara, who looks different somehow. Not her shoes and stockings and "tafferter," maybe, that make her look different. Not her hair which is brought up and tied with a ribbon. The difference lies in her face, in her eyes. Again she asks him if it hurts, this bullet in his shoulder.

"Hain't a hurtin'," he says in a whisper.

She looks at him as she re-arranges the bed cover.

"Hain't ary bullet in yer now, Doctor dug hit out. Dug hit out las' evenin. 'At crazy-simple deputy plugged yuh. Wal, Bud, my man, air a-goin' ter have him fire-booted outten office. 'Cain't shoot up my woman's kin,' says Bud. You-un air a-goin' be all right, Anse. A-goin' ter be walkin' in a jiffy."

He is going to be up in a jiffy, his sister said. But where is he going when he is up and around? He cannot take his sister, his pappy's gal, back. Cannot take her away from these things she is now looking at with pride, the things on her walls, the knick-knacks on the table, the fertile valley beyond, her man who is bossing the road gang. He cannot go home without her. Defiance of his pappy is useless when he is home. He would not be taking her back as she was anyway, even if he could trick the Falloways, which is not possible. He could not trick her, or force her, if he wanted to.

"'Roads jine folks,' Bud's pappy say. 'Roads air a-goin' ter jine hills ter United States,' say Bud's pappy."

"She knew what I was thinking," says Anse to himself.

His lips are dry. He moistens them with his tongue. His face is hot. He tells her that he wants to work on the road, that he wants to tie one end of the thread around his pappy's cabin and the other end around her big blue and white house.

"Yo're fever-burnin'," she says, and gives him a glass of water.

He hears her say that he will be up in a quick jiffy to help her man, Bud. His mind clutches the image again, the thread that now seems to knit its ends around his pappy's cabin, and the other end around a big blue and white house down in the valley.

THE WIVES OF THE PRESIDENTS

By J. P. Glass

The Girl Wife of Theodore Roosevelt, Who Died When He Was Only at the Start of His Career

IN THE days of his eager young manhood, Theodore Roosevelt underwent an ordeal which, in a less healthy being, might have produced disastrous consequences.

The first romance of his life had come while he was a student at Harvard. In that Brookline society to which his birth, his affluence and his social position took him he met Alice Hathway Lee, the beautiful daughter of George C. Lee of Chestnut Hill, near Boston. Their engagement followed and in the October following his graduation they were married.

Almost as soon as he had begun to think for himself Roosevelt had determinded to dedicate himself to a public career. He was free to choose, for while he was not a man of great wealth he had inherited a substantial fortune. But the first years that followed his marriage were spent in literary work while he delved into the mysteries of politics and politicians in the New York district in which he lived. It is to be assumed that he had plenty of leisure in which to play the lover to Alice Lee, and life must have been wholly beautiful for her.

They had not yet shouldered the responsibilities of domestic life. The early months of 1881 found them living with Theodore Roosevelt's mother at 6 West Fifty-seventh street.

They were both ridiculously young, but Theodore Roosevelt had provided for them a serious conception of life. He had made his initial plunge into politics and had been elected to the State Assembly. The road lay clear and bright before them. Alice Roosevelt must have known, even then, that her husband was bound to climb high. Life promised unending adventure in progress and achievement.

Into the midst of this early happiness came an expectation of the greatest adventure of all. A child was anticipated. But instead of happiness came unbelievable grief.

In 1884, with the birth of her first child, Alice Roosevelt died. The tragedy, so utterly unexpected, came not more than twenty-four hours after Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Sr., had passed away.

The child, a girl, received from her mother the sole gift that poor lady was able to bequeath her—her name. She became the Alice Roosevelt of White House days, the Princess Alice who achieved a name and fame quite her own, and who, as Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, has added to her celebrity as a dominating figure in Washington life.

By a sardonic turn of fate it is likely that his young wife's death was partly responsible for Theodore Roosevelt's climb to the place in history that has become his. In the days of grief that followed his loss, he went west. His ranch days in North Dakota brought him acquaintance with the ranchmen and cowboys of that still extremely youthful country, and with their thoughts and ambitions. Out of this experience came at least one important result in the organization of the famous Roughriders of Spanish-American War days.

His career as commander of the Roughriders, linked with his other achievements in the world of politics, brought him the nomination for Vice-President in 1900. The assassination of President McKinley followed. On September 14, 1901, he was inducted as President.

Alice Lee Roosevelt had been dead seventeen years. She had never known any but the youthful Theodore Roosevelt, full of enthusiastic and optimistic plans. It is improbable that any of these envisaged the Presidency.

PARALLELS---Ancient and Modern

By Philip Johnston

with plans for making clay conduits to be placed below the surface of the street, and carry off the water. It was necessary to make this pipe in short lengths, convenient for carrying and laying, and to devise a method for rendering the joints "water-tight." The latter requirement was met by making a bell-shaped flare on one end, while the other end was made straight, enabling the small end of one joint to be slipped inside the large end of another, and a bond to be made with clay or slime.

Below the brick streets, excavators have discovered this ancient drainage pipe, its condition as good as the day it was placed. A comparison between it and the pipe used today in Los Angeles discloses a startling similarity. For while manufacturing methods have been improved, the fundamental design remains almost identical—comprising the familiar bell joints. Perhaps the most interesting conclusion to be drawn from this is the fact that between the drain pipe of Nippur and that of Los Angeles there intervenes 5000 years of time and 8000 miles of airline distance, as well as the Dark Ages and other historic catastrophes—yet the basic ideas of drainage methods have continued to the present with little change.

The most significant contrast to be drawn between Nippur and Los Angeles is that the pavements and drainage systems of the former benefited but a small portion of its population—those who had great wealth or political influence. Outside the relatively small area where lived the socially elite were the homes of the lower classes, a collection of squalid dwellings fronting on streets wholly unimproved.

Beside Nippur, there are numerous remains of ancient cities that offered striking contrasts with those of today. Athens was the occidental center of culture three centuries before Christ. Yet the travelers of today who view the splendid ruins of her Acropolis are given no hint, by those masterpieces of architecture with their fluted columns, of the sorry conditions under which a majority of Athenians lived.

"Aside from public buildings there was no magnificence in Athens," according to Munro. "Houses and shops were miserable affairs of frame and mud-brick with flat roofs. The danger of fire being small, no regular system of fire protection was provided. The risk of destruction by the lawless elements was much greater, yet nothing akin to a modern police force was maintained. There was, however, a body of slaves (chiefly Scythians) to whom certain police functions were entrusted. Their weapons were bows and arrows; their chief function was to maintain order at public meetings, to eject obnoxious speakers, and to assist the courts by acting as bailiffs or deputy sheriffs. They did not regularly patrol the streets. City planning had little or no application in Athens. Its streets were narrow, crooked, and badly maintained. Most of them were mere alleyways with scarcely room for a carriage to pass. Carriages, by the way, were rarely used within the walled limits of the city. Few streets and roadways were paved, and there were no sidewalks anywhere. There was no system of public lighting, and the narrow streets were infested at night by footpads and yeggmen. The practice of throwing garbage into the streets served to make the highways "unsightly and unfragrant," as one writer remarked. On the eve of any religious celebration or public procession, the householders were required to clean and level the streets in front of their property. Aristotle mentions certain officials who were entrusted with the function of keeping the streets passable. But they evidently did not make a good job of it for Aristophanes (the George Bernard Shaw of antiquity) portrays his old, nearsighted Athenian groping his way along the roads, ankle deep in filth.

At its height, Athens had an area of about two square miles and a population of perhaps 100,000. Xenophon states that it had 10,000 houses. A prototype of this city does not exist in the New World, for even our small towns with their wide streets, excellent pavements and lighting systems have reached a degree of comfort undreamed of by the sages of Greece.

The largest, and by far the most important city of ancient times was Rome. Its walls surrounded an area of three and one-half square miles and Gibbon has estimated its maximum population at 1,200,000. Yet twenty-five feet was the maximum width of most of the principal thoroughfares, while many of the side streets were only seven feet in width—narrow alleyways hemmed in by high buildings that shut out most of the sunlight.

"Few of these streets were paved," writes Munro, "and those only in the center." Blocks of stone or slabs of lava were the only available materials for that purpose. From all accounts this pavement was neither very smooth nor safe to walk upon, and as it was not regularly cleaned, it frequently became covered with refuse."

When Vespasian, who later became Emperor, was only a street commissioner under the Emperor Caligula the latter, upon finding a quantity of mud in a side street, picked up a handful of it and threw it into Vespasian's lap as a reminder of his neglect.

Drainage of Rome, according to Lanciani, was planned by Etruscan engineers and employed by Tarquinius Priscus. Several drains were built, among them the great Cloaca Maxima, which passed under the Forum and is still in use, twenty-six centuries after its construction. These drains, which were constructed of bricks and stone, carried both surface water and sewage, and emptied into the Tiber, which served as the cesspool of Rome for nineteen centuries. Very few private houses were connected with the sewers, which served for the most part only the public buildings and palaces. Openings into the sewers were made at intervals along the streets, and from these the stench exuded during the hot days and nights of summer. It would have been intolerable but for the fact that the frequent heavy rains and the steep gradients combined to keep both streets and sewers well flushed.

Rome had no system of street lighting. Only on the occasion of great public festivals was there a general street illumination. People of the lower classes, when they ventured forth into the streets on dark nights, carried lanterns, while the well-to-do hurried along, preceded by slaves carrying lighted torches.

The streets of Rome were perhaps more congested than those of any modern city, and traffic regulations were necessary. Caesar promulgated a law that vehicles could move through the thoroughfares only at night.

Housing problems in ancient Rome were acute, and the poor classes lived in tenements described by Vitruvius as being erected with stone foundations and walls of sun-dried brick that reached a height in many instances of five stories. Owing to flimsy construction they often collapsed, which brought about the enactment of building ordinances. Augustus promulgated a rule that no private structure should be higher than seventy feet, and Trajan tried to lower this limit to sixty feet. Another stipulated that no private dwelling should be more than twice the height of the street width on which it fronted. And it is remarkable to note that, word for word, this is the law in some American cities today.

As a corollary of its congestion and the compactness of its buildings, land in Rome became valuable and rentals high. It is estimated that the site of Caesar's Forum cost a hundred million sesterces—over $5,000,000. The site of the new City Hall in Los Angeles cost $3,512,500.

Thus it is seen that ancient Rome was faced with problems quite similar in many ways to those that confront modern Los Angeles. And the Roman engineers planned and constructed improvements with such a degree of excellence that it was made the greatest city of all but modern times.

Yet Los Angeles, a city with a population but slightly greater than that of ancient Rome, has provided for the comfort of its citizens to a degree undreamed of by Cicero or Antony.

Roman engineers far excelled all others of ancient times in the art of bridge construction, and their work seems all the more astonishing when we consider that scientific design and stress analysis were wholly unknown to them. Falsework was placed, and over this the arches were laid. The final test of the correctness of the design came when the falsework was removed—a test that was at once simple and conclusive. If the bridge stood up, the engineers breathed a deep sigh of relief; if it fell down, explanations—and sometimes heads—were required. History records several instances where a finished bridge collapsed.

Within the past few years, engineers have conceived and designed a number of bridges for Los Angeles which, with their slender arch ribs of long spans, would have greatly astounded the builders of two thousand years ago.

The most amazing contrast between ancient Rome and modern Los Angeles appears in the methods by which public improvements were installed in those cities. Rome, the mistress of the western world, recruited from subject peoples vast numbers of slaves; and from their enforced labor she obtained the power to drive her galleys of war, to excavate and construct her drainage systems, to quarry stone for her palaces, temples and pavements. Hers was an age of muscle and sinew, even as ours is an age of electricity, steam, and gasoline. But those slaves became so numerous that ultimately they outnumbered the citizens by three to one. And when, in the fourth century after Christ, barbarians laid siege to the City of the Seven Hills, those slaves turned against their masters, plotted the overthrow of the state, and actually opened the city's gates to admit the enemy. And thus fell Rome, victim of the Frankenstein of slavery that she created.

How different is the Los Angeles of today! She has harnessed the racing torrents in mountain ranges hundreds of miles distant and, by means of slender wires of copper, through which flows the energy of countless thousands of slaves, power is conveyed to places where work must be done. Vast underground pools of oil have yielded fluid capable of imparting energy to machinery of ingenious design. And thus we see Herculean monsters of steel, obedient to the hands that guide them, performing tasks once done by the sweat of the brow. Too, they have made possible the accomplishment of deeds almost as great as those attributed by the ancients to their gods. Greatest of all, they have emancipated man from most of his drudgery, and have given him time to play.

Moreover, the public services of Los Angeles are employed by all of its residents. Unlike the primitive improvements of Rome, they have not been constructed by forced labor merely for the benefit of a few.

The Memory Garden

You're lonely, Emily?
Well, if I were you,
I'd plant my garden full of sweet,
Old-fashioned flowers.

Mignonettes and cornflowers blue,
I'd grow;
And near the street tall hollyhocks
To greet with friendly smile
Each passer-by.
Poppies, marigolds and morning-glories, too,
Oh, such color-riot there would be
The while.

That all who crossed my path
Would want to stop
And smile and pass the time of day,
As in the long-ago
When strangers neighbored
All along the way.

This very thing, I'd do,
Emily, if I were you,
And lonely.

JOY RIDE

Kitty lounged in her boudoir very much distressed. When Esther phoned that she was driving around to take her for a ride she tried every excuse in her repertoire, but Esther refused to accept "No" as an answer.

Reluctantly Kitty donned her smartest sports frock and painfully forced her feet into a pair of ultra-fashionable sports shoes.

She uttered a sigh of relief as she took her place in the roadster and surreptitiously slipped off her shoes.

Esther, pretending not to notice, turned cityward instead of heading for the open country, remarking that she had a little shopping to do.

In Jesberg's Walk-Over Shop Esther asked to see the new sports styles in Main Spring Arch Shoes and invited Kitty to select the style she liked as a birthday gift.

Kitty was delighted and when the salesman fitted a pair that took her fancy she was enthusiastically thrilled, saying, "I had lost hope that stylish shoes could ever be comfortable."

Kitty wore the new shoes all the afternoon and upon arriving home she said "A thousand thanks, Esther, for the best joy ride I have ever had."

"Allen gal, from ongodly Meddlesome."

"I heerd on her. I shore heerd on her," says Anse.

Anse listens to the preacher's long discourse about the Allen gal meeting Bud Falloway on the creek-bed road near Pennyroyal. The wordy preacher tells about the way the Falloway boy lifted Barbara Allen and her mule out of the mud, rescuing her after a heavy rain, when she and her mule were caught in a slide of mud down the mountain. He tells about Falloway and her making up right away, and about Falloway trying for weeks to get word to her to meet him and hitch.

While he listens to the preacher give details about his sister's escape and the hitching, he keeps his eyes down so they will not betray his anger.

"When a gal and man makes up hit hain't ary use a-tryin' ter stop 'em," says the preacher, with a slap of his hand on the Bible. "Wal, 'at Allen gal air shore a-settin' purty."

The preacher adjusts his galluses again.

"Reckon this-un better be a-hustlin'. Weddin' this mawnin'. Fun'ral preachin' purty soon in Duckhead. Revival this evenin' in Pennyrile. Lord's business air a-rushin'. Air you-un a-goin' ter Falloway settlement?"

Anse nods.

"An' yer hain't a Falloway?"

Talt Allen's boy looks up at the preacher now. Maybe the look in his eyes tell the preacher something. Maybe Anse's eyes speak before his lips, because the preacher, gathering his tail-coat, steps away.

"I air Talt Allen's boy," says Anse.

The preacher is near a laurel thicket and, with a frightened look and leap, he disappears. Anse fires his rifle-gun blindly toward the thicket, then listens to the pounding of the preacher's feet as they take him down the hill.

Anse moves down the right fork of the trail, the fork the preacher issued from. At the foot of the trail he meets a creek branch and follows its banks for several miles. When he comes to a road made by dry-land sleds he pauses. Looks around until he sees a cabin under the sycamores. He calls to the woman sittin' in the doorway. Tells her he is looking for the Falloways.

The woman, old woman stroking her shins, lifts her hands to her mouth, speaks through them.

"Across mountain," she says. "Effen yuh cross mountain an' foller creek-bed an' keep a-goin' agin ol' fire-ball, yuh cain't miss hit. Cain't miss Falloways. Lan' o' milk an' honey. Right smart folks air Falloways. Heerd ol' man Falloway air smartestdest speecher in all hill country. He shore air progressiondest lawmaker. My boy been 'way over mountain ter Falloway lan'. My boy say roads air a-goin' ter be fotched hyar. An' when hit comes we-uns air a-goin' git rich offen fire-coal an' white oak timber. We-uns got whole mountain o' coal. My boy he air a-goin' ter be rich some day. Maybe won' come in my time. Afore long I lay this ol' body daown. Been laid daown long time ago effen ol' man Falloway didn't fotch tooth-dentist daown hyar fer fixin' up this-un's ol' pizened mouth-gums. Reckon you-un heerd on my boy. Name's Noah Hathaway. Hathaways been hyar fer more'n a hundred year. Kilt Shawnee Injuns along this branch. Air yer a Falloway?"

"Hain't," says Anse, taking a step, then stopping again. He stops so that the desire 'way down in him to say who he is might rise to his throat.

Once Overs —:— —:— By C. D. Batchelor

"Wanta buy a book called Sonnets by a feller called Shakespeare. Dere's some pretty hot stuff in it."

"I air Talt Allen's boy," he says at last.

The woman who is Hathaway scratches her head. Her mouth opens a little. Her brows draw together. She shows that she is looking 'way back into the past, searching for a link, straining her memory. Anse waiting, watching her puzzled face, sees her at last shake her head.

"Cain't recollec' 'at name. Maybe heerd on hit sometime. Air you-un from Duckhead?"

"We-uns air Meddlesome Crick folks."

"I heerd on Meddlesome. Hit's a fightin' lan', hain't hit?"

Anse takes another step, wondering at the ignorance of folks who never heard of his people.

"Effen yuh see my boy Noah, jes' say you-un seed his maw. He war ter be hyar this mawnin'. Reckon maybe sence he been away he got himself up a gal maybe."

Her voice strings away as Anse begins the climb up the steep trail. Through the thinned pines and the short laurel he walks with his even stride, noting with quick eyes of the hunter every movement. He is on strange land, in a strange country, and the thought makes him cautious. Instinct guides him while some of the things the mountain woman said return to his mind and repeat themselves. He wanted to say a lot of things. If it were a man instead of a woman who talked to him about blood, about warfare against Shawnees, about power of a family, why, he would have had something to say. In a way he feels a deep disgust for the ignorance of folks. To get over the edge of his own familiar Meddlesome Creek country surprises him.

It is one of those long mountains he climbs. A circling road seems to wander to no purpose through thin beech woods, past cliff edges again and again, level itself for miles, and then shoot upward at last to a bald summit. From here the land below unfolds and stretches out into a level valley; wide, long valley cuts by a river, dotted with blue and white houses, marked off in varying shades of green. He sees the roads, white and straight, and black dots that move mysteriously along them. He thinks of the words of the preacher, the preacher calling this the land of Canaan.

Again he moves on, begins the descent. Loses view of the valley from time to time as the trail doubles and dips to laurel and rhododendron thickets or meanders between knobs crested with wind-whipped pines. And from time to time, with surprising suddenness, the valley bursts into view, making him pause and ponder. He meets a branch and follows the trail that borders it. He begins to feel hungry. Hunger gnaws in him and he stoops to drink of the cold, swift waters. When without warning the valley springs into view again he is at the mouth of the branch and on the bank of the river. He can make out the things that looked to him just like black dots. Above him he sees a machine drawn by six mules, sees men following with shovels and picks. Sees the carts dumping their loads along the river banks.

He walks now toward a lane that leads away from the road builders. Follows the lane until it turns sharply and becomes a road, a street. Here he halts, surprised at the scene before him, the brick business stores, the automobiles, the folks in store clothes. He looks in vain for mules and dry-land sleds. The bustle in Falloway settlement makes him hesitate to walk up its busy main street, yet he finally moves on; spurred by hunger, he looks for a restaurant. When he is half-way up the street he leans against a post in front of a store and studies the fronts of the buildings.

One question will do to find his way to the Falloway home, one question put to any of the passers-by. Yet, he waits, never feeling sure of the way to ask. A strangeness grips him, an insecurity. The corners of his eyes see men glancing at him. Some smile or wink at a companion. When he turns around once he sees the keeper of a business store staring at him. Wherever he looks he sees the name of Falloway. On the bank, the general store, the long building before which men are staring into the innards of an automobile. The name of Falloway seems to flaunt itself before him. Anse, after a while, feels a tap on his shoulder and turns around slowly, his eyes showing astonishment at the familiarity. He frowns and shifts his legs as a man in blue uniform looks him over; sharp-eyed man sizing him up from his hat to his boots.

"What you doing here?" The uniformed one folds his arms and bores Anse with steady eyes.

"Hain't a-doin' nothin'! Who air yuh?"

Anse's hard highland eyes look squarely into the stranger's. Conflict of eyes in which neither man gives in. The uniformed man once more sizes up Anse, raises his eyes just long enough to look at his hat.

"You can't do nothin' in this town. No vagrancy in this town. Why you toting that cannon? You're talking to the town marshal. Now, why you toting that cannon?"

A fight goes on within Anse. The rebellion of the mountaineer against being questioned, his hatred of airing his business to strangers, his age-old suspicion, heat his blood. He could resort to the hill habit of silence. He could refuse to answer. Could walk off. But he is here to get his pappy's gal, his own sister, and there is something in the eyes of the town marshal that speaks resolve. Anse does not want to be run out of town. He will fail in his mission.

"Why you toting that cannon?" repeats the marshal.

"Fer squirrels."

"Huh. Squirrels. I wonder what you'd have if you shot a squirrel with that gun. Where you from, anyway?"

"I air from Meddlesome."

"Huh. Blockadin' country!"

Anse sees folks stop, or walk slowly past so they can hear. Sees more curious ones form a little knot near the marshal. Sees girls pause to look at him and hears their giggles. Girls with their hair whacked off at the ears and their legs exposed below their knees. Strange land, he thinks, strange land where women cling to children's dresses and wear their hair like men.

"Look at your hat! Full of holes." The marshal says it with a jerk of his head upward.

The folks standing around stare at Anse's hat.

"Bullet holes," says a voice.

"Of course, bullet holes," says the marshal. "What's your name?"

"Allen."

Another conflict going on 'way down in Anse. He is about is say he is Talt Allen's boy. About to fling at the marshal and the smiling men in store clothes a name that works magic wherever he goes. A name that men fear, a name that is more powerful in the Meddlesome country than the sheriff. Yet word might travel of Talt Allen's boy being in town, might tip off Bud Falloway; might interfere with Anse's reaching his sister. On the other hand, there is the danger of his being jugged and held if he does not give some account of himself. He sees the impatience on the town marshal's face; sees him bite his mustache and glance at the group of men back of him.

"I air Talt Allen's boy," Anse says.

The marshal wrinkles his brow. Seems to ponder over the name, then shakes his head.

"Never heard o' this Talt Allen. Who's he?"

The spectators glance at one another, then back at the marshal. A man in riding pants and shiny boots takes the marshal by the sleeve and whispers in his ear. Anse watches the face that is whispering. Seems to him he has seen this moon-shaped face before with its button-like nose and small ears. Somewhere he has seen the short squatty body. The hillman's mind goes back to his pappy's lookout on Porky Ridge. The background of the gap suddenly slides in behind the man who is whispering to the marshal.

Half a year since Anse saw this face through the old spyglass, since this moon poked itself through the gap, through the door of Anse's pappy's domain and peered up the forested slope. Long time since this squatty body led men up the trail to his pappy's still and was stopped by a shot from his pappy's hog rifle that took off he prohibition man's hat.

Anse remembers the weeks and weeks that he and his pappy and brother were hemmed in by this Federal man and his gang that loafed in Milk Sick Cove settlement waiting for the Allens to come out; waiting for the chance to nab Anse's people when they had to come out for provisions, not knowing that the Allens can stand siege of ten years if necessary.

Now the whispering stops. The government man steps forward with the marshal, stands in front of Anse with the town officer and looks the hillman over, sizes him up from head to foot.

"So you are Talt Allen's boy," says the Federal man. "Guess you're running your dad's corn juice into this town."

The Federal man turns to the marshal and the bystanders.

"This Talt Allen's notorious. Bet all the liquor we've had in this part of the country lately has come from that Meddlesome Creek district. Leads right back to that crowd, this billy's pappy. What do you think, marshal? Went into that country with my men and you'd think the sheriff and them would give me some help. I guess not! The minute the sheriff heard I was coming he proceeds to get sick abed. All his deputies, too. Seemed to be a eppydemick of something that just touched county officers. Sick abed and told me and my men

When Clothes were Clothes

NOTHING is more fashionable than a Fashion Show, especially when prominent women and debutantes act as models. The audience then, for an hour or two, is enchanted with visions of styles that are on the way; and it generally is agreed that the rising modes eclipse the waning ones.

Every generation takes itself so seriously. It thinks the past can not hold a candle to it. In fact, it really does not take a generation to bring about this sort of thing—a season will do it. Last year's clothes may look strange to us, but those of fifty years ago look absolutely weird! Women today are not going to argue, when they think of the nine ounces of clothing they wear as compared with the outfits of their grandmothers, one of which weighed anywhere from nine to twenty pounds. They are pleased with matters as they are, that's all.

There may have been any number of advantages to living in those days—in the Dark Ages before electric refrigerators, six cylinder coupes, Boston terriers, wind-blown bobs and sun-tan complexions were invented, but at least they were not to be found in the modes for wearing apparel, most modern women will agree.

In the course of collecting odds and ends that people do not want, the Good Will Industries of Southern California has picked up some interesting things. Among them are baby carriages, cigarette cases, dray-horse harnesses, kitchen cupboards, clothes and sometimes articles of finery of other days.

For one reason or another people can no longer keep these antiquated garments of their mothers and grandmothers and so they are thrown in the Good Will bag. There are afternoon and evening gowns which, when they were seen with eyes accustomed to their style, were considered of great beauty, and there is even a bridal gown—so old its ivory satin is cream colored now, but otherwise it is as good as it was when, on an evening some time around the period of the Civil War, it played its part in a romance.

These dresses have lain hidden away in cupboards and trunks through all the years, but when they went into the Good Will bag they began life all over again. For it seems that Mrs. Elaine Anderson Dudley, executive secretary of the Women's Auxiliary of this organization conceived the idea of using them—of giving fashion revues with them. She thought a fashion show could just as well exhibit styles of the past as those of the future and that her show would have a different effect on the women than such affairs generally have—it would make them pleased, instead of dissatisfied, with the clothes they were wearing at the time.

The old-time fashion revues of the Good Will Industries are now given at women's clubs throughout Southern California, and it is small wonder that they create much merriment. How can one help, for instance, seeing that elaborate blue and white dress, all boned and padded and with intricate do-daddles around the hem, and with an enormous er—a—bustle adding graceful contours, as it were—how can one help visioning a lady in this creation running to a streetcar and swinging herself on board, such a thing as even our best-dressed girls of today have been known to do? And we have said nothing of how the skirt of this dress is looped up and around and about so as to reveal quantities of a cerise silk petticoat. To be sure the lady would probably die of overexertion from the heavy load she has to carry, or else she would get entangled in it and fall by the wayside.

And think in this hygienic age of wearing that black and purple foulard with its black lace dust ruffles, or the yellow mulle afternoon dress that would keep anybody's floor nice and tidy? The complications, too, of an outfit such as that worn recently by Miss Agnes Estelle Reuland when the revue was given for the California Women of the Golden West is astounding. No wonder there were no airplanes or skyscrapers in those days—it must have taken all their best engineers to draft these things! An intricate blouse of Brussels lace, a cream skirt that is yards and yards and yards around and has a saucy dust ruffle adding allurement to its lines. Beneath this is a heavy brown silk petticoat that is also yards and yards and yards around. An imported brown velvet dolman with a quilted blue satin lining, completes the picture except for a brown bonnet that wafts over one ear just like a whole wheat waffle coming to rest there.

Somehow one would know that the woman who owned the cream alpaca with the er-a-bustle, and the black silk coat all shiny with jet beads to match the bobbing jet ornament frisking about on the bonnet, must have talked about her neighbors.

The green velvet with its leg o' mutton sleeves must have seen many brilliant afternoon affairs for it has a prosperous air. It traveled with a sage green bonnet which, in truth, is not much more than a spangled butterfly—that is, the hat acts as a sort of pancake-like background against which the butterfly does its spangling. Psychologists say that man's needs force him into invention—how was it then that carpet-sweepers ever came into being? Surely they were never needed. Perhaps though, it may have been after styles changed that the need arose which brought about the invention.

While as for the bathing suits—all one can say is that modern Pacific Coast fish would die if they saw one of those archaic things coming into the water. Long sleeves, buttoning carefully at the wrists; full, nice long ankle bloomers; skirt pleated and hanging well below the knees; blouse full with a V neck and a long sailor collar. Then too, there are black stockings to go with this, and sandals that lace up high around the ankles with a smart air, and finally, a pretty straw hat.

There is a lovely Gibson ensemble made of red chiffon. If the lady of the cream alpaca knew the lady of the red chiffon she undoubtedly talked about her. Did she not wear a transformation—that is, false hair—under her red chiffon hat, and was there not a general atmosphere of the siren about that long, trailing skirt with its black ribbon velvet trimmings and its white embroidered medallions—to say nothing of the great black velvet sash?

Mrs. James B. Leonette in a popular creation of 1865

One can almost se ethe bride as she walked up to the altar that night some fifty or sixty years ago. She was tall and she was slender—the stiffly boned waist line of her costume makes us certain she was not a husky maiden. Her father must have been wealthy, as he could afford to send back East for the heavy, imported satin, the real lace and the seed pearls, for his daughter's wedding gown.

A hand-tucked, embroidered baby dress is there, too, and a man's full dress suit with its tight trousers and string tie. Nobody knows who made it or wore it—the baby dress, not the string tie—but anyway, it was planned so baby's feet should never get exposed. It is two yards long.

If one wanted to be sentimental about all these things one could sigh over the possible heartaches and jealousies, the love-pangs and the hopes the wearers of these gowns knew as they poured tea for their guests at a crowded at home, or danced with the Governor at the inaugural ball. One could, without much difficulty, reconstruct romance and tragedy and write a novel around each dress.

In the meantime it is more practical to thank the gods that be for the unconventional age that is upon us—when women can be beautifully dressed in nine ounces of clothing instead of in twenty pounds.

Trillium Ovatum

I found a trillium growing in the wood,
A pure white shell upon a sea of green,
Touched by the sobered sunbeams that between
The redwood branches sifted, where I stood.

A faultless piece of workmanship it seemed,
Faultless but far too frail for sea winds stern,
Sheltered from vandal touch by sword-like fern
That all unsheathed in morning sea mist gleamed.

And then, beneath another tree I found
Some trilliums grown old, the starry forms
Not seared or broken by the scoffing storms
That snatch up trees and fling them to the ground;

But flushed with struggle, radiant were these,
Complete in form, gay swirls of ruby red,
Flashes of glory, e're they fell and shed
Their brightness there beneath the forest trees.

Anse knows that some are privately gloating over his pappy being tricked and beaten. Satisfaction in the souls of some. Anse sees more than one young hillman who has tried to make up with Barbara, his sister; more than one who has felt her disdain and her pappy's.

The sting of a hurt pride grows sharper to Anse. That his sister would hitch with a man outside her district, a man from another world, a man who is trying to coax in the railroad, a man who said at a Fourth of July speechmaking that the day is coming soon when automobiles will line the street in Pennyroyal and every other hill town, instead of mules and dryland sleds. All these things mean just one thing: The Falloways have once more come out on top. And being a hillman, Anse knows that the boy of the Duckhead Farrels who just said that he saw Barbara Allen and Bud Falloway, was carrying out a subtle revenge for those, who, like himself, were ignored by Talt's gal. This Farrel boy was letting Anse know that folks knew the disgrace his, Anse's people, had fallen into. It was the same as if the Farrel boy had said that the folks under the porticos knew that the Allen structure was beginning to weaken. Those who are staring and whispering under the porticos, and looking up from under wide-brimmed hats, are conscious of a crumpling of power.

Anse knows that a little gap in the hills will gradually wear down to a big one. In his mind there seems to be the need of repairing something, something he vaguely sees as a gap in his pappy's domain. It is a mythical thing, this break, this weakening. Anse sweeps the town with his eyes as if searching for a means to repair a break, a way to strengthen a name. It is as if he is looking for a tool to repair a sudden break in his pappy's cabin or in the corn crib. Oddly, his mind seems to think only of a tool to repair the Allen name.

It has been a long time since he was in Pennyroyal Settlement. Months have passed since he came down Meddlesome this far with his mule to buy a new saddle. Always, whenever he comes to Pennyroyal, there seems to be a duty to fulfill that touches his pappy's domain. There is always the need of leaving this settlement with the show that the Allens are still powerful, still to be feared. He thinks of the last time when he settled a dispute with Moses Valentine, another of the Duckhead Creek boys; settled something in short order, almost on the spot where he now stands. The same faces looked out from under the porticos on that morning. Even Luke Foraker, the Deputy Sheriff, stood in the same spot where Anse sees him now. Anse sees that the law, in the person of Luke, is looking at him.

Apathy that hangs in the air and stands out on the dark faces under the porticos gives way slowly. There is something in the sudden shifting of bodies and the quick glances down the mud road that gets Anse's attention. He sees Luke Foraker, the Deputy Sheriff, move off; move off in slow strides as he looks at papers taken from his hip pocket. Then down the road, just below the narrow bridge over Meddlesome, he sees a hillman, stride a mule approaching town. Jabe Morgan, the Duckhead champion of Saturday evening fist fights, comes up the road and slides off his mule in front of the bank with a significance that misses a few, a significance that is borne to Anse quick. Quick, because the sight of the newcomer opens an old sore. With the never failing memory for details of a wrong, peculiar to the hill mind. Anse thinks of a year old grievance. It begins to rankle in his blood.

Just about a year ago in Pennyroyal Settlement when Jabe Morgan, in view of the same men and sons of men who sit under the porticos, laughed at Anse. Laughed and made a gesture which Anse did not see at the time. It was a long time after it happened when Anse finally learned about it—about the gesture. One day when he was toting yellow corn and met Carr O'Gowd on the creek-bed road, he learned about the gesture.

"Effen yer haint a-goin' tell, hits me a-tellin' yer," Carr had said, "'at Jabe Morgan fotched his thumb to his nose at you-un. This-un seed him."

A year ago since Jabe had thus saluted Anse behind his back. The two are meeting by chance the first time in a year. The incident has traveled far in a year. The slur and the insult to the older boy of Talt Allen is remembered by them all under the porticos. With a sure instinct for trouble even when signs have not actually developed, men become more tense and watchful. They look at Jabe Morgan, who is looking in the bank window, then they look at Anse, who is leaning against a post.

Anse watches the Duckhead fighter, sees him turn around at last. Observes that Jabe Morgan throws him a glance then looks beyond. No surprise, no recognition, no signs on his face that he has seen the boy of Talt Allen. Yet Anse knows that behind the mask of apathy and unconcern the thoughts of Jabe are taken up with him. Behind that Sphinx-like face a hill mind is busy with strategy, with plans, with schemes for meeting the approaching emergency. The eyes of Jabe Morgan rest on the end of the road, where it joins Meddlesome, so he can think and plot.

As the two men—an Allen from Meddlesome and a Morgan from Duckhead—stand immovable on opposite sides of the street, and appear unconscious of each others presence, the score of hillmen and town men under the porticos increase to two score. Swelled by the keepers of the business stores and the loafers inside the restaurant, the crowd knits together in groups.

Anse knows the first move is his. His is the grievance. And he knows that the Allen name is on trial. The recovery of his pappy's gal, his own sister, Barbara, is his mission; but there is the pressing need now of first showing Pennyroyal that a man who trifles with an Allen has to pay. He knows when a mountain family loses power, allows the respect of folks to wane, trouble comes piling on top of trouble. One defeat begets another. The punishment of a Duckhead Morgan means more than the avenging of a private wrong. Secretly Anse seizes the chance to offset the moral defeat of his pappy and his family when they lose Barbara Allen to a Falloway. Maybe way down in Anse there is the call of his own blood for a fresh example of his courage and confidence, a test he puts to himself.

He knows better than to put a chip on his shoulder, even figuratively, and to walk up to Jabe Morgan; and he knows better than to expect Jabe to put a chip on his shoulder. The move, first move is Anse's. But he wants his act, his plan for revenge, to be effective as Jabe's insult a year ago. He watches the hogs wallowing in the mud for two or three minutes. Then he glances up and down the road, and at last glances back of him. He sees a potlicker bitch hound suckling her puppies as she lies under the porticos, in front of a business store. Her puppies yanking at her teats, while her eyes blink and her mouth snaps at the flies buzzing lazily around her.

While men under the porticos watch and Jabe Morgan leans up against a post in fornt of the bank building, Anse steps over to the hound mother suckling her puppies. He leans his rifle-gun up against the wall of the building and bending down, picks up one of the puppies. Holds it in his arms and strokes it. Slowly straightening up he looks across the road, directly at Jabe Morgan. The Duckhead fighter throws him a glance. His glance lasts long enough to see Anse point with his thumb at the potlicker hound and puppies and grin. The meaning is sharp. Men under the porticos grasp the idea quickly. Pantomime stronger than a curse. A piece of damnation that makes men under the porticos open their mouths and stare at Jabe Morgan, while only the grunting of the hogs in the road and the bellowing of a cow for her calf break the silence of five tense, uncertain minutes.

Maybe because Jabe Morgan is a highlander and knows that a show of temper would seem ungainly after the subtlety of Anse Allen, he casually stretches and gives a hitch to his jean pants. Then he looks up and down the road. His eyes at last seem to search the hill-top and then drop slowly to look at Anse again, who sets the potlicker puppy down on the board walk and again leans against the post.

Jabe Morgan comes, comes in a slow saunter, his hands deep in his pockets. Comes through the mud road with his eyes now on the Meddlesome Creek man, the oldest boy of Talt Allen. He takes his hands from his pockets when he is five feet from Anse and hooks his thumbs in his galluses. Throwing his head back he spits in the Meddlesome Creek man's face.

Anse's form sagging against the post under the porticos makes a quick spring and the impact of the two carries them to the ground, where they lock and gouge and roll in the mud. The wallowing hogs retreat and the cows turn their heads to watch, dull eyed. The men under the porticos and in the doorways of the business stores watch silently. Grim faces, dark under wide brimmed hats, say nothing.

The man from Meddlesome and the man from Duckhead, both big boned and hard muscled, both endowed with genius for gouging, are struggling to free an arm or a leg, trying to unwind a single foot or arm to get an advantage. Rolling over and over, each man awaiting a chance. Somehow Jabe Morgan frees an arm and hits Anse at close range. They loosen holds and rise. There is a minute when fists fly and the crashes of muscle against bone and bone against muscle follow each other quickly. First blood is drawn from the nose of Jabe Morgan and he clinches. Gouging now, mountain gouging carried to its limit. Thumbs against windpipe, knees jabbing each others vitals. Once Jabe's teeth hang like a dog's to Anse's right ear. A fight conducted without rules. Not a Saturday evening fight but a war in which anything is fair. No rules. Highland rough and tumble strategy executed by masters, glorified by mud.

From different districts, from hinterlands separated by many mountains, these two, however, are of the same traditions. Punishment, torture, mean nothing. One of them must go home carrying the stigma of defeat, suffer a collapse of local power, showing the wounds of pride more than the wounds of body. Pride is stronger than pain.

There is a little difference in the strength of the two men. Jabe Morgan seems a bit fresher, a bit quicker to revive after hammerings and thumb pokes. There is a little difference in their ages. Jabe is several years older and has the benefit of more experience. He has been in more conflicts, certain muscles are better developed. He is quicker to see an opening. Anse, locking again with Jabe to save himself from a series of jabs in the face can not, however, seem to ward off an uppercut on the jaw that sends him to the ground. The world reels before him. The dark faces of men under the porticos draw away strangely, the figure of Jabe Morgan seems terribly big. Anse dimly sees two hillmen rise from their seats on the boardwalk and stretch. A sign that they do not believe he is going to rise. Meaning, too, in the way other hillmen glance at each other. And all the time Anse is struggling to adjust his body to a rocking earth and pull his feet under him to rise. His feet trying to get a hold slip in the mud but they keep trying. He knows that as long as he tries to get up he is not defeated. No ring rules here. A man is not beaten in the hills until his body is laid down.

As one in a fever which transforms things into grotesque shapes, Anse's mind struggling to grasp the situation clearly, trying to reason why he is fighting the man who stands towering near him, he thinks suddenly of his sister, his pappy's gal, who ran off with a Falloway. His Pappy told him to bring her back.

"Anse, yuh kin fotch Barbara back," his pappy's voice seems to be saying.

A glimmer of light that comes to him through the moment of nightmare. His pappy's words seem to solidify, seem to get under him, seem to pry him loose from the mud and lift him to his feet. He rises, clinging to a handful of mud, and, reason returning, he lets it fly at the eyes of Jabe Morgan.

With an accuracy developed by all Meddlesome Creek men in rock throwing, with a sureness of aim equal to a rifle-gun, and which has cut off the head of more than one highland moccasin snake, Anse's throw in the case is perfect. His eyes, mud spattered, his sight blotted out, Jabe can not avoid the rush of Anse's body, the swing of the Meddlesome Creek man's arm that lays him down.

For half a minute Anse watches his enemy stretched out in the mud. Then seeing the men under the porticos rise to stretch or climb on their mules hitched to the racks he walks under the porticos for his rifle-gun.

Mud covered, bleeding, limping, Anse moves down the board walk, crosses the narrow bridge over the branch flowing into Meddlesome and disappears from view of those who continue to sit under the porticos and whisper.

Anse walks on down the left bank of Meddlesome, follows a well worn trail made by mules and men trafficking between Pennyroyal and the wider, more fertile valleys, tapped by the railroad. His legs feel heavy. He tries to oversome his limping tries not to reveal the injury done him by Jabe Morgan, as he passes hillmen on the trail who are bound for Pennyroyal. Understanding suddenly why men stare at him and women and hill girls shy off the trail as he approaches, he washes his face in the creek waters and scrapes the drying mud from his shirt and jean pants.

The trail leaves the creek-bed after a while and rises steep and straight to the top of a bald hill. From the summit Anse can see only the peaks of other hills. Below him the trail forks and he hesitates. He has reached the end of familiar land. Beyond the spot upon which he stands he has never ventured. He scratches his head for several minutes and ponders. Then he hears a faint footfall of somebody coming up the hill. He sits down, and, with his rifle-gun beside him, waits. Forces unconcerned apathy to his face. With hill habit he relaxes his body and face. As the footfalls grow louder and he hears the cracking of the brush he lies on his back with his hands under his head and half closes his eyes.

Pretty soon he sees the tall body of a hillman stepping out of the mouth of the right fork of the trail, bending low under the branches of the pines. He does not see Anse until he is almost upon him. The buckles of his galluses shine, flash in a ray of sun. He has a Bible in his hand, and is talking to himself. When he sees Anse he stops abruptly. Talt Allen's boy affects to wake up from a sleep, rubs his eyes and nods.

The stranger wipes his face with a large blue handkerchief while he talks about the steepness of the trail, the heat, and the chiggers that try the religion of men.

A birthmark on the man's face holds Anse's eyes. Long and red on a freshly shaven cheek, it sends Anse's mind hunting. Back some months ago he saw this face over a stand in Milk Sick Cove, way down on Meddlesome in his own district. He remembers that the revival brought the preacher nothing, because the Allens and the Allen kin down to fourth cousins are not religious. He remembers how the man before him left town, railing and muttering at the sin in the district; this man before him

SALESMANSHIP

By Alma Whitaker

I'VE been listening to some masterly talks on salesmanship lately, as appertaining to all sorts of commodities from books to form products.

There are a few points they all agree upon. As for instance that "accurate information" about everything pertaining to the product itself, the market situation, the tastes of communities etc., is essential to good salesmanship.

And that it is most vital to have "The right commodity in the right place at the right price in the right condition at the right time" in order to achieve successful business.

Again, in the matter of advertising, three points are important . . . the appeal (1) to desire, (2) to health, if it's food, and to entertainment, if it's mental, and (3) to style. And in all cases whether it's a book or an avocado, appearance must be considered . . . the product must be exposed attractively.

Now, this being the June bride month, numerous unattached males and females who have failed in personal salesmanship are wondering just why they have been relegated to the shelf.

And although I am no Beatrice Fairfax or Dorothy Dix, even my mail contains certain yearning inquiries as to the secret of popularity. How exactly do certain young people of either sex (and even the middle-aged ones, sometimes) become so sought after, while others are allowed to languish in neglect?

Of course what the neglected languishers need is a good practical course in salesmanship. The whole difference between the popular ones and the neglected ones is the same difference between oranges and lemons.

The orange growers studied oranges, discovered countless unsuspected virtues, found that they could be coaxed into looking more attractive, tasting more attractive, and, by a little artful wrapping and packing, could appear infinitely more stylish. They probed for vitamines and found 'em in profitable array. And they studied market conditions, carefully arranging to have oranges "in the right place at the right price in the right condition at the right time" so that the market was never glutted and the competition as nicely gauged as possible. For any surplus crops, they discovered countless by-products, such as marmalade, juice, orange cordial, etc.

The lemon growers, on the other hand, are still groping somewhat. The lemon's charms remain very restricted and the growers haven't been able to prove that they contain peculiarly valuable constituents for babies and such like precious consumers. Everyone knows that lemons have all sorts of virtues which have never yet been properly promoted. So oranges are infinitely more popular, stylish, and fetch a much better price.

All the same, the analysts are working on lemons. They may not become dazzlingly popular and desirable, like oranges, but pretty soon we shall see them blossom forth with new charms, at a better price, in better society. They will be charms all their own as distinct from oranges . . . no sense for the lemon to try to compete in the orange realm. It will create a realm of its own, with quite separate attractions.

Now I think some of our human lemons have been making the mistake of trying to vie with oranges . . . or in just moaning and whispering because they were not born oranges. If they can't be oranges they dont want to be anything. They haven't been artful enough to appreciate that a first-class lemon in its own sphere is vastly superior to any old orange on a variety of specific occasions. Given good lemons at the right time in the right place at the right price and in exactly the right condition, people can become frightfully enthusiastic about them.

All that's the matter with the lemons is that they have been content to remain just lemons. Whereas it is quite possible for lemons to become etherealized and highly precious, with the proper consideration for its own special attributes.

We have only to gaze around us to see how many human lemons have made the very most of themselves and achieved a success in life quite unwarranted by their original charms. Some of them have become most desirable in essence form . . . content to be a pleasant condiment rather than to hog the whole situation. Many have made themselves necessary to the family, and to all those within their realm by being cool and refreshing and thirst-quenching, as distinct from sweet and cloying. Some again have evolved into piquant deserts. Others into aids to beauty.

Here's where "accurate information" is an aid to success. Let us suppose a neglected young lady wishes to attract the attention of an indifferent young man. She will first discover what sort of family he comes from, what his mother and sisters are like, what his social status is, what are his present tastes, how does he stand financially, what are his leisure hours, hobbies, if any, what sports he is interested in, whether he is vain or modest, slow or ambitious, whether he likes style or prefers things plain and simple, whether he has a taste for sophistication or is merely literal, whether his sense of humor is limited or broad . . . and, if possible, why he broke with his former girl.

Having acquired all this useful data, she will behave accordingly. She will either be dashing and extravagant or considerately economical. It may be most desirable to "just love a bargain," to scorn the latest fashions, to present herself with bobbed or long hair, to be either conservative or progressive, to listen with intense interest, or chatter blithely, to read up on the sports news, or on stamp collecting, to be sympathetic and encouraging, or teasing and provocative, to be like his sisters or as different from them as nature will allow, to be coy and hard to see, or to be the ever-ready little flattering consoler, to dress flashily or affect the quiet tailored modes, to giggle or to just smile, or to remain gravely serious . . . and if she acts upon her "accurate information" with discretion, the fellow is hers.

It isn't enough to just be a lemon. Sometimes one must be marmalade, lemon pudding, lemon frizz, lemon lotion, lemon flavoring or lemon after milk of magnesia . . . a piquant versatile lemon that appeals to desire, health and style as the market demands . . . and one must watch one's distribution so that the market is never glutted with one's charms and that surplus can be quickly converted into approved by-products. The time, the place, the price, the conditions must always be right. The price, for instance. It can be a fatal mistake to order the expensive dishes on an evening when the poor boy is broke, and equally fatal to affront him with decisive economy on the day he is feeling flush.

It's the same way with the men. Accurate information about the lady is most important. Time figures prominently here . . . the chap who calls too often and stays too late never has enough charms to offset this tiresome little aggravation. On the other hand it is never safe to believe that "absence makes the heart grow fonder." That often applies only to the merest soupcon of absence.

The young man should know exactly when it is diplomatic to seem a bit jealous and when jealousy would effectually bring forth rude ultimatums from the lady. He must know when to be the devout lover and when to treat the lady with slightly impudent persiflage. He must only be dominating in discreet dashes . . . at the right time, in the right place, under the right conditions.

In fact, dears, listen to a few good salesmanship talks. See what the avocado growers are doing to make that product desirable, piquant, stylish, successful . . . even, I mean, when most people rarely like avocados the first time they taste them . . . yet invariably live to feel no larder is complete without them.

The Sunday-school class had just presented a most successful program in the form of a Colonial tea. Of this the members were justly proud and one hastened over to auntie's to give full account.

"And oh, auntie," said Mary Ann, "It was the best calomel tea any class ever did give."

was unpleasantly hot. Looking over the sides of the cockpits both caught one vivid glimpse of the derrick and the ground around it. Only one brief look as they flashed overhead, but it was enough. Jimmy felt a weakness in the pit of his stomach at the thought of going into the inferno. Ordinary danger he didn't mind—but this—

He brought the plane down steadily.

"How did it look to you from the air?" the major asked anxiously as they met.

Long shook his head. "Pretty bad. The fire's almost up to the derrick. We didn't get a good clear look, but what we saw was bad enough."

"Do you still want to try and get in to the valve?" the major asked Jimmy. His voice offered leeway to escape from the promise.

Jimmy had made up his mind. "I'll try it," he answered.

Nothing more was said. Long helped him get the suit on. The townsmen gathered around, stared with morbid curiosity. A few of their remarks reached his ears.

"Bet he won't come out of there alive."

"Sure he will. That suit won't burn, even if the heat does get through. I've seen Will Carter go in places almost as bad."

"Yes, and he had hoses shooting water all over him while he was in there."

"That's right. They ain't got any water here.

Another voice—"Bet a dollar he don't get out."

Jimmy shut his ears to the words, and stood there waiting for the helmet to be put on over his head.

The major spoke: "If you feel it getting too much for you, come right on out."

Jimmy nodded. Long raised the helmet, slipped it over his head. A sense of stuffiness closed down around him.

Long tested the last fastening, patted him on the back. Jimmy went toward the edge of the fire, walking awkwardly in the clumsy asbestos boots and the hampering weight of the suit. Heavy asbestos gloves covered his hands, made them feel shapeless.

The sun was down over the horizon now, brief twilight was closing in.

A hard gust of wind drove the smoke aside, showed the gaunt skeleton of the derrick. It was trembling, tottering. Jimmy stopped in his tracks at the edge of the flame-covered oil, eyes glued on that shaking tower of steel.

It swayed, seeming to lean out. Then before his eyes it crumbled on the fire-weakened foundations. With a crash that was plainly audible inside the helmet it plunged down into the bosom of the fire. A mammoth tongue of flame seemed to leap over the spot.

Jimmy hesitated a moment longer. The reflected heat of the fire was already making itself felt inside the suit. The task ahead was vastly more difficult now than it had been a fw minutes before. The top of the pipe was covered with a tangled mass of blistering steel, perhaps impossible to get to. There was no water to sustain him and keep the suit cool. Nor was there any good reason why he should make this desperate attempt, in which the stakes were life against the major's money.

Jimmy didn't think beyond that. He hunched his shoulders abruptly and strode into the smoke.

Heat. He had never known the word until now. It seemed to press in through the walls of the clumsy suit, to strike at his body with physical blows. To wilt the flesh and numb the muscles.

A steady strumming began against his helmet, against his body. It was oil raining from overhead. And it struck and stuck and caught fire. It couldn't have been more than thirty seconds that he was in the belt of flames. It seemed like an age. His foot struck heavily against an oil-covered timber. He saw that he was at the edge of the derrick foundations where the heavy timbers were being consumed. Rising up before him were the sagging girders of the derrick.

He ducked, crawled under a bent length of steel, felt the heat of another piece as his gloved right hand rested on it briefly. The air was a little clearer in here at the heart of the fire. Through the writhing, twisting streamers of smoke he saw the gushing fountain of oil rushing up from the ground. The night was fast closing in. The red light of the flames wrought smoke and shadows into weird fantastic shapes. The whose top of the derrick floor was covered with the twisting girders that had fallen over it.

The heat was making him giddy. The smoke and acrid air were filling the helmet. He was feeling strangely weak.

Twenty feet away was the top of the pipe, from which the endless stream of oil shot high. Twenty feet away—and it seemed a mile. He clambered between other pieces of steel, through splashing fountains of oil. One foot went through a hole in the wooden floor, down into the deep pool of oil that filed the cellar under the derrick floor. He pulled it out with an effort, conscious of new danger. If a section of that floor gave away, it would drop him into a thick, sticky death. He'd never be able to get out. He'd sink in ten feet of crude oil and disappear.

He stepped over another part of the derrick, reeled as he stumbled into the solid steel side of the drilling string. It took a great effort of will to stagger stubbornly forward to the top of the pipe, to lay his clumsily gloved hands on that valve and tug.

But he did. And the wheel of the gate valve did not bulge.

There are moments in life when all efforts seems futile. When the body and the mind crave nothing but rest and relaxation. Such a feeling comes to a man freezing to death. Such a feeling came to Jimmy Harkness then. He had done his best—and now the wheel wouldn't turn. His heat-tortured body wasn't equal to grappling with the problem. It wanted nothing but rest now.

He stood stupidly, in the final lassitude that precedes the end. He had gambled—and lost.

But this wasn't a game where the throw of the dice, a turn of the cards decided. Flesh and blood—and the will—were factors also.

With a great effort he fought back the lassitude, applied his mind to the problem. There had been a bar lying on the derrick floor when Long and Charley were lowering the cans of nitroglycerin. He remembered it plainly. And the bar had not been moved. It had lain about six feet from the pipe, to the north. But which way was north? Things were swimming giddily. He dropped to a knee, groped around in the swimming sticky mess of oil on the floor. Groped endlessly; ages it seemed.

The stiff end of the gloves struck against something. He tried twice before he could grip it. And then the dripping black length of the bar came up as he lifted.

Gasping hoarsely for breath, Jimmy got to his feet again, turned to the gate valve. His eyes were smarting. The glass window of the helmet was almost obscured, covered with oil and soot. Dimly, vaguely he made out the gate valve, the wheel that would have to be turned to close off the flood of oil. His lungs were on fire as he weaved to it and tried to get the end of the bar between the spokes of the valve wheel.

H missed the first thrust. But the second try made it. He wedged the bar in, leaned his weight on the end.

Again nothing happened.

Despair swept every other emotion aside for the moment. Stark despair. He had failed. A frenzy seized him. He lunged savagely at the bar. And it gave. The wheel turned slowly.

For a fraction of a second Jimmy thought that his fingers had merely slipped on the oily surface. Then he saw that it was not so. The valve had turned. He pushed again. The wheel turned more.

Exaltation filled him with the brief wine of new strength. He fell on the bar and turned it swiftly.

The fountain of oil dwindled slightly. Dwindled more. And as the frenzy of Jimmy's motions increased the thick black column was cut in half, and then to a quarter of its volume. With astonishing suddenness there was no spouting, roaring fountain. Only a thin little spurt that died and wasted to a trickle. One last effort killed the trickle. The spattering shower from above ceased. Silence closed in, broken only by the hungry crackle of the surrounding flames. They would burn for hours yet.

The exaltation faded away, even as the fountain of oil had gone. The new flood of strength was no more. Jimmy dropped the bar, weaved again there by the pipe. His head whirled. He felt sick, tortured. There was something he must do, and he couldn't think what it was.

"God!" he sobbed, and it was a wrench of pain, a tortured prayer.

Something he must do. Like a slow motion picture it came to him. Get out, away from the well. Away from the fire. There was another world where the air was cool and clear, the ground dry and comforting. Another world—out there away from the derrick.

He turned blindly and groped ahead. Ran full into a hot beam of steel, and didn't even sense the pain of the contact. In some manner he got by it, and struck another and got by that. He slipped and scrambled up. He was fighting now, blindly, instinctively for life itself. Water and cool air. Just those . . . He fell again as he stumbled off the edge of the derrick platform and reeled into the solid belt of fire that ringed the place around.

Jimmy reeled and stumbled and threw up his gloved hands as the red light seemed to die away and his senses sank abruptly toward the vast blackness that lay beyond the line of life and death.

Water was dashing across his feverish face. Cold water. Wet. And there was sweet cool air in his nostrils. And sounds in his ears. Light in his eyes.

Jimmy opened his eyes. The sounds were voices. Long was kneeling on one side, dashing water on his face from a bucket. Jimmy struggled up, and Long helped him. He saw then that the major was kneeling on the other side. His head was still whirling, and his throat felt raw, but life was coming back strongly.

"Give me," Jimmy asked huskily, "a big drink."

A cup was handed him. He sipped, and then gulped the cool water. It had never tasted so sweet.

Maj. Brawner spoke, queerly, unsteadily. "How do you feel, son?"

Jimmy handed the empty cup back, managed a wry smile. "All right, I guess. Thought I was gone back there. What happened? Everything went black."

"We were watching," the major said in that same moved voice. "We saw you back in the smoke, staggering toward us. And then you fell, right inside the fire. Long ran in and brought you out."

"You were right with me," Long said quickly. "Don't give me all the credit. You did as much as I did."

"I should have done it all," the major said. "I had no right letting you go in there son."

"I had a chance," Jimmy told him with another wry grin.

"A mighty slim one."

"I told you I was a gambler."

The major pulled a stogy from the breast pocket of his coat with fingers that were not quite steady, and thrust it in the corner of his mouth. But his voice, when he spoke, was steady and quiet. "I understand," he nodded. "Tomorrow we'll talk about the stakes you won in there. Right now I can't think of anything better to ask for than your hand. I'll be proud to shake it, son."

Their fingers locked tightly. And somehow Jimmy felt better about that grip than he did about the money he was going to get on the morrow. For it was the first gamble he'd ever made in which he had earned money and gratitude and respect.

SOLUTION OF LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE

Anse knows that some are privately gloating over his puppy being tricked and beaten. Satisfaction in the souls of some. Anse sees more than one young hillman who has tried to make up with Barbara, his sister; more than one who has felt her disdain and her puppy's.

The sting of a hurt pride grows sharper to Anse. That he sister would hitch with a man outside her district, a man leaning against a post.

DOMAIN

He spits in the Meddlesome Creek man's face.

Anse's form sagging against the post under the porticos makes a quick spring and the impact of the two carries them to the ground, where they lock and souse and roll in the mud. The wallowing girls scramble to their feet and move down the board walk, crosses the narrow bridge over the branch howling into Meddlesome and disappears from view of those who continue to sit under the porticos and whisper.

Anse walks on down the left bank of Meddlesome, follows a well worn trail made by mules and men trafficking between Pennyroyal and the wider, more fertile valleys, tapped by the railroad. His legs feel heavy. He tries to overcome his limping tries not to reveal the pain that is in them. With a sure instinct for trouble even when signs have not actually developed, men become more tense and watchful. They look at Jabe Morgan, who is looking in the bank window, then they look at Anse, who is leaning against a post.

THE MAGNIFICENT GAMBLE

A Stirring Tale of Jimmy Harkness, Daring Aviator, Who Met the Biggest Adventure of His Life When a Texas Oil Well Started Gushing Columns of Fire

By T. T. FLYNN

JIMMY HARKNESS landed on the flying field at Tulsa with two gallons of gas in the tank of his Whirlwind "Special" and 50 cents in his pocket. A few pay hops from the field would bring in enough money for another jump toward the Pacific.

The men at the Tulsa field didn't know the state of his bank account. The Special received as much attention as though Jimmy's pockets were fat with bills. After it was gassed and oiled, greased and put in the hangar, Jimmy bummed a ride into town and spent twenty-five of the 50 cents for a double order of beans and bread. The remaining 25 cents went for two packages of cigarettes.

There was the problem of sleeping for the night. He solved that by returning to the field and broaching the matter of a bed to the night mechanic.

Red headed, short, good natured, he stood there under the office lights waiting for the verdict.

After a moment the mechanic grinned, too. "Guess you can bunk on the bench over there. You'll be looking for some pay hops tomorrow, I guess?"

"I will," Jimmy agreed.

Luck was with him the next morning. Ten dollars' worth, in the shape of two young ladies who had been taken with a desire to fly for the first time.

The second day was barren of results. The morning of the third showed no better promise. The ten dollars was shot full of holes; the hangar bill was no smaller. Jimmy bummed a ride into town about noon. He was getting tired of Tulsa, impatient to be on his way to the coast. After eating real stew and pie for lunch he stopped in at the telegraph office to send a wire to Bill Gaspar in Los Angeles. Bill was a good scout. If he had any extra money he'd wire it pronto.

Jimmy was standing at the counter writing out the message on a pad of blanks when a man stopped beside him and asked the clerk if there was a wire for Maj. Brawner. Subconsciously Jimmy noted that there was a wire. He heard the rasp of tearing paper as the envelope was opened. And a moment later heard Maj. Brawner utter an exclamation, and then ask the clerk excitedly:

"I wonder if there's any chance of getting an airplane out at the flying field?"

Jimmy looked up then, to see a tall, spare, elderly man whose features were all but hidden behind a white beard.

The clerk answered doubtfully: "I don't know. Guess you can, though."

Jimmy tore the sheet off the pad, stuffed it in his pocket, and spoke to Maj. Brawner. "I've got a plane out there. She's a fine one, too. Take you anywhere you want to go. Right away."

A keen pair of cold blue eyes surveyed him. It was an anxious moment. But when the major spoke he said a queer thing.

"Are you a gambler?" he asked quietly.

"Sure I am," Jimmy answered coolly. "I'll sit in the first game that comes along if I've got the money to do it."

Those blue eyes probed keenly. "You'd gamble your last dollar?" Maj. Brawner queried sharply.

"Certainly. My last dollar wouldn't do me much good. But I might run it up into real money."

"I'm sure glad to meet you, son," he said heartily. "Providence has brought us together."

Jimmy shook hands rather weakly.

"I want to get to Astoria, Tex.," Maj. Brawner said, shifting the long thin stogy to the other side of his mouth. "And I'm in a big hurry."

Jimmy was feeling better. "My ship can do a hundred and twenty an hour," he said confidntly. "How far is this Astoria? Don't think I ever heard of it."

"I should say it's about five hundred miles. Over in West Texas."

"Take you there for"—Jimmy sized up his man again—"$300."

The major did not bargain. "That's fair enough," he conceded. "Two hundred dollars, eh? And I suppose you won't have any hesitation about gambling for it? Say $50 if you lose and $500 if you win? I'll be frank with you, my boy. I have just $50 to my name. I've been wildcatting for oil over there in West Texas. Had a couple of dry holes and used up all my money. But this last hole looked better every foot it went down. I came here to borrow some money a week or so ago and I couldn't get it. I have just received a telegram stating that the hole seems about to come in. I must get back at once. Take me there as fast as you can, and if the oil makes the money I'll pay you five hundred. If it fails, you keep the fifty and no hard feelings."

"Let's have the fifty," Jimmy said. "I'll need it to get the plane off the field. I'm down to three and a quarter myself."

"Son," said Maj. Brawner, "I'd like to shake your hand again. This means a lot to me."

Jimmy shook, willingly.

They took a taxi out to the field, stopping at the major's hotel on the way for his traveling bag. The fifty loaded the Special with every last drop of gas and oil she would carry and paid the hangar bill. Jimmy strapped the major in the front cockpit seat, strapped himself in the rear, gunned the motor for a little to make certain it was running right, and then took off. His Oklahoma and Texas maps were on a board hanging on the right side of the cockpit.

It was some time after four when they picked up a State highway and followed it into Astoria, passing a fair-sized oil field just before they reached the town. They did not land. Maj. Brawner pointed out to the southwest, motioned to keep on. Jimmy did.

Fifteen—twenty miles of that, and the major pointed a little over to the left and nodded. Jimmy made out the dark skeletonlike shape of an oil derrick its bottom boarded in. And as the plane droned toward it several other derricks were visible in a radius of several miles. Wildcatters probing for oil in untested ground.

They circled once over the derrick, and looking down Jimmy could see two workers standing outside, looking up at them.

There was plenty of level ground around the derrick. Jimmy picked a spot a few hundred yards away and brought the Special down in a nice landing. The man who reached them first was bigger than the major, in his thirties, with a long, serious face and overalls stained with mud and water and oil.

"Gosh, I'm glad to see you!" he called as he came up. "Didn't think you could get here this soon, Maj. Brawner."

The second man was even taller than the first, a great burly giant of a man with wide shoulders and long powerful arms.

The major climbed out of the cockpit and shook hands with the first man and nodded to the second. "Got here as quick as I could," he answered. "What's the prospects, Long?"

Jimmy climbed out and stood by the side of the plane, listening.

Long was the first man, the one the major shook hands with. He answered hesitatingly, "I don't know, major. It's got me stumped. I had the well cemented in, and we drilled down through into the sand like you ordered. We got gas and a good showing of oil. But that's about all. I stopped drilling this morning and went in and sent you that telegram. Then I got a load of nitroglycerin and brought it out here. Pete Stevens, who shoots most of the wells in these parts, had gone East for a visit, and it was shoot it ourselves or wait for him to come back. His wife let me have the soup out of his storehouse. I've shot wells before. I can do it myself. I've just been waiting till you came before I did anything."

The major frowned and then looked around at Jimmy. "Son," he called, "come here and listen to this."

Jimmy joined them. The major said slowly: "Long, who is drilling the well, tells me things aren't as bright as his telegram led me to believe. I don't know what to do. I meant what I said about the five hundred if things turned out all right. Long is ready to shoot the well. Will you stay around and see what happens? If the shot fails I—I don't know what we'll do next. If it comes in with any showing there'll be plenty of money. I can go to Astoria and get all I want from the bank—although right now they won't lend me a slick dime. What do you say?"

Jimmy was smoking. He inhaled and trickled smoke through his nostrils. "Nothing much to say, is there?" he asked. "I went into it with my eyes wide open. There's not enough gas in the tank to take me any place. I'll stay around and take what comes. Forget about me. I'll make out all right no matter what happens."

It didn't take Jimmy many minutes to move the plane off some distance from the well. When he got back to the well the driller and his helper were busy. Two long thin cans were lying on the wooden floor of the derrick. Jimmy looked curiously at the big bull wheel, the tool forge, the calf wheel, the knowledge stool, the long string of heavy drilling jars hanging just clear of the mouth of the pipe. And he eyed the pipe curiously, thinking of the thousands of feet it penetrated down into the earth. Down there where the oil and gas were locked in the strata of past ages. Or were they? It was a magnificent gamble.

The major explained the situation to him as they stood to one side. "We're down in the strata," he said, chewing on a new unlighted cigar. "There seems to be oil there. Gas for sure. Smell it seeping out of the top of the pipe?" Jimmy nodded. The major went on. "There's some oil, too. You can see it smeared all over the drill string there. But there doesn't seem to be enough pressure to force a flow up through half a mile of pipe. They're going to lower nitroglycerin down to this bottom of the pipe and explode it."

The nitroglycerin had evidently been poured into the long cans from a number of smaller ones.

Jimmy turned back to the pipe. Charley, the burly helper, had picked one of the cans from the floor and was cradling it in his arms while Long was attaching the end of a reel of wire to the top. When the wire was fast and the slack taken out he inserted the end of the can in the top pipe like a bullet in the breech of a gun and lowered it slowly out of sight. Thereafter the taut wire slipped down into the pipe slowly.

Long minutes passed while the wire flowed down into the hole steadily. At last it went slack. A bit of jerking slipped a catch at the top of the can and the wire came loose. It was reeled in quickly, and the second can put on the same way as the first and sent down into the hole also.

When the end of the wire was out of the pipe Long took another coil of finer wire that was attached to a bundle of several sticks of dynamite and started to lower the sticks down the pipe with the wire.

"What's that for?" Jimmy inquired.

"Electric current goes down this wire, explodes the dynamite, and sets the nitroglycerin off," Long explained.

"And then," the major finished dryly, "we see if we have any money or not."

A moment came when the dynamite charge was in place at the bottom of the well. Long and Charley lifted a great heavy gate valve and screwed it in place on top of the pipe, and fastened it securely there. Then Long attached a battery to the end of the wire and carried the battery outside the derrick. "All set?" he asked.

Long jerked the handle of the battery.

For a moment nothing seemed to happen. Then the earth beneath their feet shivered slightly. The dull faint sound of a distant boom came to their ears.

Long was on his feet, walking rapidly toward the derrick. Charley, the major and Jimmy followed him.

Just as Long reached the edge of the derrick he stopped, cocked his head. The others did the same. In the heavy silence that enfolded them they heard a low sullen rumbling that seemed to grow in intensity even as they stood there listening.

Jimmy found himself retreating step by step as though pushed by a force outside himself. That lone stark derrick standing there had ceased to be a network of steel girders standing inanimate on the sear, bare Texas plain. It was now a living thing, sending out that awesome rising note that was tearing up from the depths.

In another moment the plane was tossing in the upward currents of hot air that boiled up from the fire

The boards around the lower part of the derrick prevented them from seeing the top of the pipe. But suddenly the note broke into a roar that rasped at the drums of their ears. A burst of black water and mud and oil shot up in the middle of the derrick.

Higher, higher it rose until it struck the crown block at the top. It burst past the crown block, shredding itself into black oily spray that showered far out around the derrick.

They turned and frankly ran.

Even as they turned, Long uttered a sound that was almost a moan. "My God!" he cried. "Look at that!"

The rushing roar of gas and oil, the sullen spatter of heavy drops on the ground was cut into by a crisp crackling sound, ominous in timbre.

Everything was happening in split seconds. As Jimmy faced about his heart seemed to stop for a moment. His eyes had left the black, oily spouting column of a big gusher. They saw now a plume of fire that was curling and licking around the top of the derrick. Fire!

The major gave one tragic exclamation, and then stood for a brace of seconds with his eyes on this showering inferno that had suddenly turned riches into the promise of ruin.

But even as he looked pitying at the major, Jimmy saw the long stogy come up to a belligerent angle as the old fellow bit down hard on it.

"Long!" the major shouted, "we've got to put it out right away!"

Long was getting over some of his surprise also. His face set in lines of determination. "If we can get in there an' close that valve so's to shut the flow of oil off," he stated, "she'll burn herself out in a little while."

"How are we going to get in there?" the major demanded.

Long answered the major's question crisply: "We'll have to get Carter out here from Astoria. He's got an asbestos suit. He can walk right through the fire and close the valve."

The major nodded. "I've heard of him," he said. "Will he come?"

"Sure. His price is high, but it's worth it. Look at the oil going to waste!"

The major turned to Jimmy, taking the cigar from his mouth and gesturing with it. "Can you take him into Astoria right away?" he demanded, "and bring back this fellow Carter?"

Jimmy nodded. "Yes. There's enough gas left to do it."

The major spoke one word, briefly—an order and a plea, "Hurry."

Jimmy ran toward the plane, congratulating himself as he did so that he had moved it back to a safe distance.

The motor caught quickly, as though it sensed the need for haste. By the time Long was climbing unaided into the front cockpit the prop was kicking dust up behind, and the tachometer needle was quivering on the thousand mark.

Jimmy flew low, throttle wide open. The miles flashed beneath. The buildings of Astoria soon came in sight. Flat unfenced vacant ground extended right up to the outermost fringe of buildings. Jimmy picked a likely looking spot, sideslipped down, and made a stall landing. Long was climbing over the side before the ship stopped rolling.

"Come with me," he requested loudly. "Might need you to help carry something."

Jimmy closed the switch, cut the gasoline off, set the brakes and left the plane standing there.

They went a full quarter of a mile. Both were panting heavily when Long turned into the lawn of a small frame house, dashed up to the porch and knocked sharply on the door. It was answered after a moment by a frail little woman, wiping her hands nervously on an apron. She had evidently been washing.

"Carter in?" Long panted.

"What's the matter?" she asked in alarm.

"Nothing. Well burning. Want him to come with his asbestos suit and turn the head valve off."

She shook her head. "Will is in bed with a broken leg. He can't go."

"Any one else around here who does that sort of thing?" demanded Long.

"No. Will does it all."

"Where is he? Can he see us?"

"Why, I guess so." She surveyed them doubtfully, then stepped back, admitted them to the house, and led the way back to a rear bedroom. On a bed there, flat on his back, lay a man. Under the covers his body didn't look very big.

"Hello, Carter," Long greeted.

Carter smiled from the pillow. "Hello, Long. Haven't seen you for a long time. How are you?"

"Upset a little right now. Brought in a wildcat gusher on the Maj. Brawner lease, and she caught fire. Can't get in to turn the gate valve off. Thought you might be able to do it."

Carter shook his head. "Can't leave the bed, old man. Sorry."

"Any one else ever use your suit?"

"No."

Long bit his lip, frowned, then asked abruptly: "Wonder if I could borrow the suit?"

Carter grinned. "You can borrow it all right—but I doubt if you can get into it. You're almost twice as big as I am. You'd have a few burnt spots if you went into the fire with it."

Long's face darkened with disappointment. "But we've got to do something!" he burst out.

"It'll take a small man to wear that suit," Carter said flatly.

"The major's as big as I am, and Charley Watts is bigger yet. Looks like we're sure out of luck." Long shook his head gloomily.

Jimmy had been listening and saying nothing. Strictly speaking it wasn't his affair. And yet . . . there was the major who had made a great gamble. He spoke quickly. "Wonder if that suit would fit me?"

"You ain't figurin' on trying to reach that valve, are you?" Long demanded.

"If the rest of you have been figuring, why not me too?"

"I didn't think of it," Long confessed."

"You saw the fire. Sure you're willing to try and get through to the valve?"

"Let's see the suit," Jimmy asked.

"Mabel," Carter ordered his wife, who had been standing at the foot of the bed, "get that suit out."

She went from the room quickly, and was back in a few minutes carrying with an effort a pile of dirty, smoke-blackened, oil-stained asbestos clothes, topped by a pair of big clumsy looking boots. Dropping the boots on the floor she held the suit out to Long. A grotesque helmet with a glass window in front was included and a pair of asbestos gloves.

Jimmy tried the helmet on his head. Asbestos flaps came well down over his shoulders. The thing was clumsy, but it fitted and he could see out of the glass front. He took it off. From the bed Carter said: "The boots go on over your shoes. When the snaps are closed they're fireproof. Everything's there. You'll probably find a clear space near the pipe that's pretty free of fire. Guess you can make it all right."

Long looked at him anxiously. "Willing to try it?" he asked.

Jimmy shrugged. "I'll do anything once. Come on. It'll be dark before long."

Long folded the heavy suit up again, picked the boots from the floor. "I'll take the outfit if it's all right with you, Carter," he said. "The major will do the right thing by you."

A few more words and they got out of the house with the suit. And as they ran back toward the plane Long commented jerkily, "It's not going to be a picnic, but I guess you'll come through all right."

Jimmy grinned as he panted for breath. "Hope I do," he made answer.

The usual little knot of onlookers had gathered around the plane.

"Gusher's on fire!" Jimmy yelled at them. "Get back out of the way! I'm going to start the motor!"

The take-off was good.

From the air they could see the smoke better, a great black column of it boiling toward the sky and drifting off in the breeze to form a mile-long plume. They could see also the road leading out in the general direction of the well. Many autos were on it heading out to see the fire.

The fire had not abated in the slightest. It had increased, if anything, for the fountain of oil was continually spreading a film of fire farther and farther away from the derrick.

Jimmy's heart sank a little at sight of that great boiling wall of thick smoke, with the angry red dart of flames at the bottom. Now and then the breeze whirled the smoke aside and exposed the derrick for a brief moment. It was still standing, at least.

The major and Charley were waiting outside the ring of fire. They came toward the plane as it swooped to earth and taxied near, Jimmie stopped a safe distance away. Even there he could feel the heat of the conflagration.

The major took one look as Long and Jimmy climbed out. "Couldn't get him?" he asked, bitter disappointment in his voice.

For answer Long reached back in the cockpit and began hauling out the asbestos suit, helmet and shoes. He carried them clear of the plane and dropped them at the major's feet.

"Carter had a broken leg," he explained. "The suit is too small for any of us to wear. Harkness here offered to put it on and try to get at the valve."

Once again Jimmy felt the keen blue eyes of the old man on his face. The major put a hand on his shoulder. "You—you'll go in there for me?" he asked wonderingly.

Jimmy nodded.

"You realize there's quite a bit of danger?"

Jimmy nodded again. "Forget about me. I'll do what I can for you."

The major put a stogy in his mouth, and then took it out again. "If you do it, win or lose, I'll do what I can for you," and turned to stare at the fire.

The first autos had come up. The occupants jumped out and came toward the spot where they were standing.

Jimmy ignored them. He, too, was looking toward the derrick. The sun was resting on the western horizon, the last light of day shining warmly over the plain.

Long said loudly: "You ought to know what's on the ground around the derrick. No use rushing in there without knowing."

From where they stood it was impossible to see the bottom of the derrick. The burning oil threw a thick smoke screen over the spot, hiding whatever perils were there.

Jimmy thought quickly, and then made up his mind. "I'll fly over it and see what there is to see," he decided.

"I'll go with you," Long offered.

They were off the ground within four minutes, making a wide circle to get the slight altitude needed. A few thousand feet was good enough. Jimmy swung the plane back toward the well and throttled down to seventy miles an hour. In another moment the plane was tossing in the upward currents of hot air that boiled up from the fire. Rank gas, hot fetid smoke surrounded them. The air

TAXES GIVE SURPLUS

Latter Placed at $200,000,000

Heavy Payments on Income Leave Tidy Balance as Fiscal Year Ends

Treasury, However, Faces Problem in Paying Bills for Next Period

WASHINGTON, June 28. (AP)—Huge tax payments from income derived in 1929 will enable the Treasury tomorrow to complete the 1930 fiscal year with a surplus of approximately $200,000,000, but it will find itself faced with the problem of providing adequate funds to pay the $4,500,000,000 appropriated by Congress for next year, in view of prospective dwindling revenue.

The Treasury's last statement issued for the close of business last Thursday showed the government has collected $212,836,000 more than it has spent since July 1, 1929. With no large payments to be made before the end of the year tomorrow night, it appears certain that the surplus will be in the neighborhood of the Thursday figure.

The surplus for 1929 was $185,-000,000.

EFFECT OF CRASH

The Wall-street collapse last October, which, for a while, had been expected to reduce income-tax collections, was shown in the payments to have affected but comparatively few of the millions of taxpayers. Before the collapse the Treasury had estimated income tax for the 1930 fiscal year would amount to $2,480,000,000, but this figure was reduced by $80,000,000 through the 1 per cent reduction granted on normal and corporation income for 1929.

Despite this reduction the collections on Thursday had reached $2,404,000,000 or $18,000,000 more than was collected in the same period of the previous twelve months.

TOTALS COLLECTED

On that day the government had collected a total of $4,151,057,290 since July 1 of last year and had spent $3,938,336,827. In addition to the income tax, customs receipts also spurted upward in the last month. Those collections, which had dropped off $40,000,000 in comparison with the previous year, took an upward bound just before the new tariff law went into effect so that on Thursday the total of such revenue for the year aggregated $382,275,000, which is $12,000,000 less than collected in the same period of the 1929 year.

Part of the surplus this year is due to foreign debtor nations making their 15th inst. payments on war debts to this country in cash instead of in United States securities as had been the practice. This added $100,000,000 to the surplus.

MELLON WARNING

Secretary Mellon in opposing the passage of the original World War Veterans' Relief Act, said the government was faced with a deficit next year, due to increased appropriations for public buildings to help relieve the unemployment situation. At the same time, he pointed out the government expects less revenue next year because of the 1930 business depression.

Appropriation bills enacted at the present session of Congress which
